At the Polace, 4th February." The Queen having perfectly re hours, there is every certainty that her wound offers no danger. Her Majesty is in so satisfactory a state that she could be change one bed to another. There still remains a slight inflammation round the wound, but without any suppuration, which is considered a favorable symptom by her physicians.
The feles and rejoicings on the occasion of the birth of the Princess Royal were suspended, and all the theatres closed. The Senators and Depuies present at Madrid met, in their respective halls, to draw up congratulatory addresses t the Queen.

It appears that when the assassin, Martin Merino, approached the Queen, he knelt down and, being in his clerical robes (he was in the habit of performing service at the church of San Sebastian,) no obstacle was thrown in the way concealed upon him. The Queen mechanically put forward her arm (perhaps to receive a me-morial) at the moment, and this probably saved her life; the forearm was grazed, and the dress torn. The weapon struck her on the front part of the right side, penetrating through several folds of her manile of velvet and gold, and cut-

"Ma nina," she exclaimed, "Que cueden 'a Isabel" (my child—let them take care of Isabel!) There was a moment of confusion. The King Consort drew his sword. One of the royal halberdiers struck down the assassin who let fall the dagger, and was members of the royal suite. The Queen was able to walk to her own chamber where she was immeditely attended to, and at first fainted
