"Come, Andrea," said he, as he finished the sir, "come, let us to the window of the fair sisters; gentle Manetto will wonder why she hears

"Andrea, friend of my soul," said Domenico "it grieves me to see you thus cast down; com-pare your works with those of other masters of the art, and you can triumph in your own supe-riority. Why waste your life in unavailing re-gret, because I am possessed of a secret which to you is unknown?"

Transported with joy Andrea could scarcely restrain his impatience until morning. Rousing Domenico at early dawn, they repaired to the church of Santa Maria Nueva, which they had been employed to adorn with paintings, and there Domenico disclosed his secret. This was no other than the art of painting in oil. At this period painters usually laid on their colors by means of various glutinous substances, and this, mode, while it rendered paintings extremely liable to injury from heat and damp, very much diminished the brilliancy of the coloring. The invention of painting in oil has been disputed be so many that it would be difficult now to deter probability is, that like many other inventions which were the offspring of necessity, it was which were the offspring of necessity, it was discovered by many artists at nearly the same period when the gradual advancement of the art and the increased demand for fine pictures had called forth the talent of painting in every part of Italy. It is well known however, that Do of Italy. It is well known however, that Do-menico Veneziann was one of the first who em-ployed oil painting; and to this he was indebted for the great reputation which he so rapidly acquired. Carefully did he now instruct Andrea in the principles of that art which had been al-most exclusively his own, and by most unwearied diligence, Andrea soon mastered its difficulties. But in his heart the spirit of rivalry could not exist. Envy, base envy, was the only feeling which he was capable of cherishing, and the dislike which Domenico's superiority had long since inspired him, was gradually ripening int a deep and deadly hatred. They had nearly finished the decorations o the church during the progress of Andrea's in-struction in the new manner of painting, and as only one picture remained to be completed, it was agreed that each should paint a portion of it. But this work was destined to remain un One day as Andrea stood contemplating on of his earliest paintings in the church, and ex-ulting in his improvement as he compared it with those he long since executed under the direction of Domenico, two of the most celebrated connolsseurs in Florence entered. Not observing the painter, they commenced making remarks upon the pictures, and after praising the pro-ductions of Domenico's pencil, proceeded to ridi-cule without mercy the early paintings of An-drea. The poor artist, concealing himself behind a isly waited till they should approch at his labors, they merely remarked that Andrea's style was much improved, but that he must ever remain in the shade while his works were placed beside those of Domenico. Fixed as a statue, Andrea remained in the very spot where he had first placed himself, until the unconscious critics quitted the church, then rushing home and locking himself in his apartment, he gave way to all the agonies of envy and dis-appointment. The gentleness of Domenico's character, the purity of his life the generous friendship which he had shown him, all were powerless to check the tide of passion in Ansvil nature was aroused : he thought of Domen

There is no tempest so fearful as the tempest of passion; no whirlwind so devastating as the whirlwind of evil thoughts. Hour after hour did Andrea sit brooding over his dark and half-imagined scheme of guilt, unconscious of the lapse of time, when the voice of Domenico, summoning him to his usual evening walk account. moning him to his usual evening walk, aroused him. He hastily answered that he was engaged in designing and could not be disturbed. Domenico, accustomed to the wayward moods of his friend, bade him good night and departed. As the sound of Domenico's footsteps struck ned to the wayward moods of his upon his ear, Andrea arose, and throwing open ow, looked out upon the tranquil beau ty of the summer evening landscape. The fresh breeze played about his burning temples, and opening his vest as if to cool the fire that was reging in his bosom, he stood leaning against the casement until he suddenly perceived Domen-joo, with his late in his hand, slowly taking the way to a romantic valley, at a short distance.— The flendish spirit which had gained possession of Andres, immediately suggested a horrible Snatching up a heavy leaden weight in's step after his unconscious friend, he sed himself behind a clump of low trees in What is the matter with two of the whig iournals of our city, on the Scott question? For a long time past they have been extremely indefinite: and have not made the slightest "fuss at all on the subject. Have they discovered that "fuss and and feathers" are inimical, and that they can "feather their nests" in a more conve nient way than making a "fuss" about Scott? We have no doubt they heard from Fillmore, and are obeying orders from head quarters, and have a fine sight drawn on a great deal of pap-in the distance. They do not exactly worship the aspiring Accident that now rules, but they dare not say a word against his nomination, or a word in favor of Scott, until the question is decided by the political butchers who will assemble in the next Whig Slaughter House. We believe it was Henry Clay, the father of the whig party, who, on some occasion, made this remark, "heavens, how he nicks 'em!" and he was very much astonished to find a great number of his friends, besides himself, bobbed in a most essential manner, by some democrat. Our two cotemporaries, having the experience of Clay before their eyes, are not disposed to be "nicked" in a summary manner, before the proper time. They were mad when they developed themselves for Scott, but, latterly, they appear disposed to mix a little method with their madness, and they now hold off, awaiting the highest bid. We are apprehensive that they will be disappointed. Fillmore won't hid in a direct manner -Scott cannot bid except in a very hasty man ner, and the reward will be very slow in coming. and they, very wisely, think that they had better not commit themselves too far before they find the latter efforts of his art not doubting that then out where they shall go, and who they must go sons entered the place, and commenced turning last surviving revolutionary soldier in Butler for. The Gazette, however, has not the prudence of its colleagues. It once declared that it would "fight on fight ever;" and having said so the editor appears to be determined to stick to it.-He would be willing to make a handsome present to any charitable institution that could get n. He may win, but we think it doubtful, and we are apprehensive that his competitors will get ahead of him in the race for available patronage. It does not matter much to us, which of them beats in this ner, and at the same time take the liberty of assuring them that their policy will not succeed.

Pittsburgh, April 17, 1852. IF Dr. M'Lane's Liver Phils -- Were not and used in his private practice. Their marked success elicited the most unqualified approbation of physicians and others who had witnessed their effects. Possessing all the sensitive feelings of a thorough-bred physician Dr. M'Lane dreaded being clarsed with the shallow pretenders who crowd the columns of the newspapers with puffs of "sovereign remedies," and for a long time declined the requests of many that he would proclaim his great remedy to the public; but, finally, after much persuasion on the part of physicians and others who had witnessed the wonderful cures effected by the Liver Pills, he consented to prepare it for general use. The following certificate, from Dr. Morgan, will bear us out in this statement; it is also valuable as medical testimony of the efficacy of these Pills:mony of the efficacy of these Pills:—

"This is to certify that I have been associated with Dr. M.Lane, in the practice of medicine, for nearly two years and a half. I have had many opportunities of witnessing the good effects of his Liver Pills; and I believe they have cared and relieved a much larger proportion of the diseases of the Liver, than I have know cared and relieved by any other course of treatment.

We have known instances within the sphere of our acquaintance, where the most formidable distempers have been cared by the use of Guyzoli's Exercity Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla clone.

It is one of the few advertised medicines that cannot be stigmatized with quackery, for the "Yellow Dock" and the "Sarsaparilla" are well known to be the most efficient; (and, at the same time; innoxious) agents in the whole Materia Medica, and by far the best and purest preparations of them is Dr. Guyzon's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla.
