This may certify that I have made a chemi Mr. W. M. Arthurs, and that I find in all of them graenious acid commonly called arsenic. I have lso examined a portion of sugar brought by Mr. Arthurs, and find no trace of arsenic in it. I S. ST. JOHN, Professor of Chemistry. John M'Cune was examined, and testified that on the day on which the two eldest children died. John Cauley told him in Dunn's shoe maker shop, of the circumstance. Mrs. M'Cune then stated as follow: About two months before this time, Cauley came to the shop where I work, and told me that he had sent $40 home to his father in Ireland, which he had got from his wife, and that James Cuthbert had $100, $125, or $150, I can't be give it to him before Saturday or Saturday night. there " would be another story to tell," and before he left, he threatened to take both their he might get himself into trouble. He often used to call me out and tell me what money his never heard any thing against his character. He drinks occasionally, but never saw him drunk. Cauley came in another day, and told me that with her. On Monday avening when he came, he said that Mrs. Cuthbert had found a paper o the rats had knocked it about, as it had got among the sugar or tea. Last Sunday night subsequent to the transaction) Mrs. Caulcy old me that if the truth were known, Mrs. Cuthhad been poisoned; asked him how it took place once. and he said did not know, unless the tea or sugar had done it, that all the family had vomited. That was all that passed until Monday evening, when we came back from the funeral, when I reling. He said that if "that stuff" had not been found on the shelf, he would then either be a hell, or in the bottom of the river. His wife told him to hold his tougue, that he was a fool, and ought to do her bidding.

Michael Clanoy, sworn—The witness described the meeting between him and Cauley in his house as his wife had done. I started to go down to as his wife had done. I started to go down to Mr. Cuthbert's with him, and on the way we went into a house, as he felt sick, to get something to drink. No conversation took place there about the "children having been poisoned." Cauley said Cuthbert could not have luck, for that he dirty, and he must have, he said, a good deal of money. Cauley said that he had it all in the bank, except about $100 or $150. After the pened to be in the tea or sugar, they would ache did'nt appear as bimself.

—The day the funeral of my little girl took place I went out into the kitchen. Cauley and his wife were there, and had some coffee. They offered me some, and when I did not want it, forgod it on me. There were two bowls, and they should not cook anything more, only for them-selves, in the house. Nothing more was said into the kitchen, and Mrs. Cauley said that there had been a good deal of talk about this, back and

The Coroner's Jury.—In violation of custom when I heard of the death of the children, I went to the house of Mr. Cuthbert. Saw Caulty, Clancey and Cuthbert in the back yard. Asked Cauley how the children come to be polsoned, and he said that some stuff had got into the seeson assigned, was that the jury did not the surer. The reason assigned, was that the jury did not the sugar. The he said that some stun had got into the reason assigned, was that the jury did not the sugar. The he said his soul would be in wish the proceedings to be made public, when at hell before this, for he would have cut his throat the same time, they allowed a reporter of one paper to make public their proceedings. We do not know the motive of the gentlemen who advanced this idea, but surely in a Coroner's Jury, where it is almost a matter of life and death, the public should at least, be cognizant of the whole public should, at least, he cognizant of the whole and he lifted it off. I told him that that would For our report, we are indebted to the polite-ness of J. K. Kanney. Eso Maker would strike him dead if he would hurt Cuthbert or any one belonging to him. The statement of Mrs. Cuthbert coincided with what has been already published, and with the statement of her husband, as above, except that she stated that she examined the kettle, and in listening substance. After considerable discussion, the Jury return ed the following verdict: at the close of which he had seen the pure white arsenic, which was the result of the analysis.
