It was in the autumn of '82, business called me away from the little, thriving, busy city of L. R—k, in which I shaw equipping myself with the necessary traveling gear, I sat alone horseback, and pursued my journey for five consecutive days in a north-west ern direction, over hill and dale, glen an glade The country was then, (twenty years ago,) the Far West; now, no place this side of that or Oregon, can establish any claims to that appellation then universally given to Arkansas and Missouri But to proceed with my narrative; this coun try, twenty years ago, was sparsely settled.-Human habitations along the route I was exploring, were like "angels' visits," that is if the reader will consider some 15, 20 or 30 miles as being "far between." And it was a together indispensable for the stranger to have way bill and to use some degree of caution. o he might chance to meet the "dowy eve" in region where he could find no shelter for man . I had been much interested with the countr through which I was passing. There were herds of wild deer and countless flocks of wild turkies the evening. I arrived at the foot of the Ozar mountains, or rather a spur of that chain, and being informed by the gentleman whose house stood near the ascent, that it was fifteen miles across the mountain to the next house, I took quarters for the night, although it was not quite nightfall.

When the supper was announced. I was invited to a neat little apartment, where a table was spread on which were sundry dishes of veni well stewed and savory; sweet potatoes baked brown; corn bread, butter, coffee, cheese milk, etc. Here I was made welcome, and mos assuredly did I give evidence that my attachment to these dispensations of Providence was by no means feigued or unreal. During our repast, I, addressing my landlord, said: How far, sir, to C---?

He replied that it was about forty miles. The lady who was doing the honors of the ta-ble inquired of me if I was going to C——. I replied in the affirmative. She asked me if I ould stop at the house of Mr. P. My respon was that I had business with Mr. P., and would probably be at his house.

I told her that I was not. "Excuse me," said she, for being inquisitive I am a daughter of Mr. P., and am expecting a cousin of mine whom I have never seen. He rewas indulging the hope that you, perhaps, were was indeed rugged. I was under the necessit of walking, and it was not without difficulty even then that I succeeded in inducing my horse to follow me up craggy rocks, and down rugged precipices. However, about 1 o'clock, P. At this, the lady of the house, with much cagerness, not unmingled with timidity, asked me if I was not Mr. C. from Virginia. I told her I was not. She said that she was one of Mr. P.'s daughters, and was expecting a cousin along from Virginia.

After dinner I was again on the road, and proceeding towards C——Perhaps, the reader ought to be told that C——was not then, nor is yet, a town; no, it is merely a neighborhood, very densely settled, containing at the time of which I speak, several small dry goods establishments, shops, mills, etc. When within four or five miles of C., I met a gentleman and five miles of C——, I met a gentleman and lady, each riding on a horse, and, as in duty bound, I inquired how I should find the way to the house of Mr. P. The gentleman very politely gave me the direction, after which the lady ventured to ask me if I was not Mr. G. from On learning that I was not, she apologized by saying that she was one of Mr. P.'s daughters, and was anxiously awaiting the arrival of Mr.

G., a cousin of her's.
When almost at Mr. P.'s residence, I came up with two young ladies walking, going the same direction with myself. I asked them if the bouse then in view was the residence of Mr. P. "Yes, and you are cousin G." they both exclaimed, advancing towards me, which circumstance, youth as I then was, comewhat embarrassed me. In a few minutes my horse brought me to Mr. P.'s gate. I called. A lady came to the door, I inquired for Mr. P. She said he was somewhere about the farm, -that she had only been there a few moments,—that she did not reside there; but she felt certain that father was not gone from home! I called for accoms, and entered the house. Soon thereafter two ladies entered the room, and one of them asked me if I was not Mr. G., their dear

ceed in removing the impression.

Mr. P. came in a little before dark, and said that he had been a mile distant to visit a marri-Missouri, whether she had gone to visit a couple of sisters, who were living among the lead mines. On inquiry, Mr. P. told me that he had twelve daughters, all grown, and all living. The Model Wife.

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION Saltimore, Md., Tuesday, June 1, 1852.

Weekly Post for the Campaign. For the accommodation of our Democratic friends we have concluded to send our Mammoth Weeky Paper, The Saturday Morning Post, to Clubs, luring the Presidential campaign, for 50 cents per copy. The first number will be sent immediately after the action of the Baltimore Convention is known, and will be contined until tained. We have put the terms very low (barely cov ering the cost of paper, ink and press-work) in order that the paper may have as wide a ciroulation as possible. We therefore hope that our Democratic friends will exert themselves in procuring clubs in this and the surrounding coun-

From present indications we shall undoubtedly have a spirited Presidential campaign, and we intend going into it with our sleeves rolled up. It matters not who the nominee of the Baltimore Convention may be, we can and will elect him, and the Whigs may as well make up their minds to that result at once. They will undoubtedly fight hard-for the spoils; but we intend to whip hem decently, and have the spoils ourselves. Democrats form your clubs as soon as possible and send the names to us on or before the 1st of June. The money in all cases should accomgiven to gentlemen who may send us large lists of names. The following will be our terms, for clubs. during the Presidential campaign, a period of six months:

strangest way. He sometimes takes a fancy to dishes not to be found in the bill of fare, and fights with the waiters for not attending to his orders. He exhibits a wonderful curiosity to find out the nativity of all who are sitting near him; asks gentlemen to send him over their wine; drinks health with every one around the table, addressing them as 'your Majesty;' quotes poetry, recites parliamentary speeches, and amuses the company by telling aneedotes of the Queen and her husband, O'Connell, Peel, and Little Johnny Russell. He frequently visits Stewart's marble palace, and shocks the sensitiveness of the ladies by his strange manner and strange questions, asking them, among other drolleries, wby they don't wear beards on their chins—None of his friends have, as yet, made their appearance here to take him in charge; but—as his insanity is unquestionable—some surveillance should be placed over him by the properauthority, until they do arrive, which will probably be by the next steamer.

The Symptoms of Dysperzia are: loss of appetite, nausen; heart-burn, flatulener, acid, (anid or inedorous erretations, a gnawing sensation; in the stomatowhen empty, great costiveness, chiliness, paleness of the countenance, langour, lassitude, unwillingness to move about, lawness of spitis, palpitations of the heart, and disturbed sleep. These symptoms wary in different individuals and constitutions and in many cares bring on kidney disease, dropsy, liver complaint, and a debilitated condition of the whole body and a schatterd state of the nervous system, that renders life burdensome.

Dr. Radeiffe's tlabine Digestre. Bitters are peculiarly adapted to the deranged condition of the stomach above alluded to, and if taken perseveringly, will restore it to a healthy condition. These Bitters are imade of some of the most valuable materials of the Materia Medica, and are prepared in a peculiar manner, known only to of the most valuable materials of the Materia Medica, and are prepared in a peculiar manner, known only to the proprietor. They do not contain any garticle of alcohol, and are perfectly rafe in their operation on the human system. The most innotive and deprayed condition of the stomach is often relieved by one, bottle—all sourcess, wind, pain, and depression of spirits, are entirely removed. How can a man be in health when that great reservoir is discased. Correct the morbid state of the stomach by taking these Bitters, and Dyspepsia, with all its grim horrors, will fly from you.

The tures from this medicine have been, and will be, just in proportion to the number of cases in which it is used. Its only mireculous powers, are those which it possesses from and in common with murre, whose operations it can only assist and hasten. Its action is immediate, and, though-calm, energetic. It allays irritation, while it promotes secretion and exceetion. Irean never fail to palliate, and where a cure is possible, it will cure. This was the theory of the medicine, as invented; and experience, in numerous cases, of every kind and variety, has demonstrated the correctness of its principles.
