One day he will set Gen. P. up with a very complimentary notice, and the next day endeavors to knock him down by a lick back. The fact is, the editor does not know what to say against the democratic candidate. When he feels inclined to speak the honest feelings of his heart, he cannot refrain from referring to him in courteous terms, but when he thinks of the feels provide the whig party, he is forced to use the slang which the enthusiastic members of his party consider strong farguments against their opponents. His honest feelings appear to be with the democrats, but his long and perverse adhesion to whiggery induces him to alternate between the two. Monday was the democratid day with the Journal, and he complimented our nominee in the most landatory language. On Tuesday, however, his temper was whig, and he sanded and sneered in a manner which was no doubt pleasant to his party readers. But yes- terday he was under the democratic influence again, and he published two mortal columns of good democratic matter. We love to see this on the part of the editor of the Journal.
