He sought no such distinction when he resolved to march to semblage as follows: the defence of his country's rights. He would have been contented to have carried his musket in the ranks, to the end of the war. But his merits marked him as one being qualified for a more distinguished station, and the history of the war tells how gallantly he realized the hopes of those who advanced him. There is no spot or those who advanced him. There is no spot or blemish upon his military fame, but, on the contrary, his volunteer bravery is lauded in terms that selection was a wise one or not, it remains for the Democracy to decide. For myself, I can that would make the heart of many a veteran for the Democracy to decide. For myself, I can regular feel proud.

The fact is, that Gen. Pience volunteered for the Mexican war with the same feeling that every other citizen soldier shouldered his musket. Not one of the volunteers went to Mexico with the idea that they could ever be defeated in a single battle. Their intention was to conquer, or die on the field. They could not understand, as regulars do, the propriety of the arder to "fire and fall back"—their policy was to fire and go ahead until victory was won. It is said that Gen. Taylon thought, at Buena Vista; that he down that there were many others who would probably have been able to have borne the banner aloft with more vigor, energy and ability than my support and the principles of the Democracy, whether I am in the ranks, or whether I am in the ranks of the Democracy, whether I am in the ranks of the Democracy, whether I am in the ranks of the Democracy whether I am in the

THE NORTH BRANCH LOAN. We learn from the Philadelphia Bulletin that the bids for the State Loan of $850,000, authorized by the last legislature for the completion of the North Branch Canal, were opened at Harrisburgh on Saturday, and the loan was allotted to the most favorable bidders. The successful parties were Chas. Henry Fisher, of Philadelphia; Duncan, Sherman & Co., of New York, and George Peabody, of London. They took the whole loan, at par, as follows:
