At length, completely dressed, he descended to the garden, where he perceived Madame de Randoux: she was already returning from a morning stroll through the meadows. The young widow was clad in an elegant undress and wore upon her head a hat of the Black Forest, whose broad boarders floated down to her shoulders.—
Her feet, damp with the morning dews, and bearing in her hand a tiny bouquet of wild flowers, she tripped along the hedge rows, singing in low tones an ancient Suabian melody. The exercise had heightened her color and the joyousness of the morn seemed to breathe through all her being.

Bardanou ranto greet her and kissed her hands, as he had seen them do in the theatre. The pretty widow accepted his arm without more ado and narrated her excursion to the outskirts of the coppice. THE WESTEEN PORE TRADE.—The Louisville Courier gives a promonent account of the coming pork harvest. Throughout Kentucky and Indiana there is a large increase of hogs this season, which are worth ten per cent more than they were last, owing, it is said, to the fact that the farmers are feeding them on corn. The same account is given of Ohio. The Courier says: "Already some operators in Louisville have syle of J.C.
