We do not suppose that it was intended as a political gathering, but, 1,678 judging from what we saw of it, we think it was a much better whig convention than the late disgraceful gathering at Ningara. The colored population took the highest and broadest ground in favor of what they consider their rights, and many of their white brethren helped them to raise the plank on which they desire to stand. The Rev. C. BURNING OF THE HENRY CLAY.

Indignation Meeting of the Passengers at the Astor House. On the 29th of July, at 11 o'clock, a meeting of the surviving passengers of the ill fated steamboat Henry Clay, was held in the Astor House, for the purpose of a preliminary investigation f this terrible accident.

Nearly a hundred persons were present, and the excitement that prevailed was greater than we have witnessed for a considerable period.— The loss of wives, sisters, daughters and friends, and the narrow escape of the parties themselves, from a terrible death, of course contributed to this excitement. The marks of weeping were conspicuously visible upon the faces of many gentlemen present. The proceedings were con-

He would give his time, energies and services to any man who might be affected, and services to any man who might be affected, to investigate and prosecute the matter to the end, on the condition that his labors would be from a sense of public justice, and under no circumstances for reward. (Applause.) He had a friend present, Mr. Lovell, who had saved his sister and her infant child, and who would do the same thing. He trusted from a reward to the same thing. He trusted, from a regard to public safety, the matter would not be allowed to slumber, and so far as he was concerned he would at present say nothing more. He left the

Mr. Perrin said that, as a resident of Tennessee, he had seen so much of steamboat accidents that he thought the time had come for the voice of public opinion to speak out, now these disasters were becoming prevalent in the northern States. It almost always happened that the induces of the proprietors prevented justice being done, and the culpable parties got off "scott free."

M. E. M. LUYERROUE, who was on board the Armenia, stated that when the safety valve of the Henry Clay was opened, he saw a thick column of smoke issue. She had more steam than she could carry.

Mr. SPRANKO, of Cincinnati, said that the Armenia was making twenty-five revolutions in a minute. Mr. Collyer came upon deck and exhibited a card, showing that the Henry Clay made 25½ revolutions during a previous trip. Although the men on board dended they were realing yet he thought from their manner they admitted it. When he smelt fire, he remarked to Mr. Collyer that they were burning pitch, but he made no answer. He told him he would never travel on the boat again, and that he ought never to get another passanger. During the whole occurrence he did not see the capitaln or engineer.

A PASSRACE.—Tha capitaln stated that there were only ten or fificen persons drowned, and they were only common people. (Senation.)
