The Fate of Genius. A late number of Thomas D'Arcy MoGee's Celt, ublished at Buffalo, brings to notice a new claimant for posthumons fame. Mr. MoGeo states in his history of the early Irish settlers of America, that Christopher Colles, an Irishman, who arrived in this country about the time Fulton was born, delivered, in 1772, at Philadelphia, a series of lectures on the subject of lock navigation, and was the first person who suggested to the government of that State canals and im. to the government of that State cannis and im-provements on the Ontario route. He was gon-erally considered as a visionary projector, and his plans were sometimes treated with ridicule, and frequently viewed with distrust. In 1784, 1785, 1796, and for several successive years, he petitioned the legislature of that State on the importance and practicability of uniting the Western Lakes to the Atlantic. He was, proba-bly, the author of the letters signed "Hiberni-bly, the author of the letters signed "Hiberni-
