Written for the Morning Post. LITTLE WILLIE. BY MRS. M. K. CUTHBERT BROWNE.

[CONCLUDED.] " Mary." said James Heywood, as he entered his wife's room ; " how would you like to take at little journey? I think it would do you good, my love," and a tear filled his eye, for he saw her hurriedly put away a small straw-hat, trimmed with bright blue ribbon, that he had not seen, since it graced the head of their lost darling. Before him, she tried to restrain ber grief but when alone, she wept daily over the drawer, that contained poor Willie's clothes. The blue ribbon, that adorned the little hat, was wet with tears, but where were the rosy cheeks, and the bright black eyes, that he used to see under the bat; plast perhaps, the dark eyes of his infant boy were closed in death, and the rosy cheeks pale in the grave. Mary shut the drawer, and turning round, en deavored to smile, but meeting her husband's look of anguish, she laid her head on his bosom. and for some time the young pair wept in silence. We shall meet him in Heaven," said James at length, "we shall behold our lest one there, Mary." "Oh, James," sobbed the young wife, "I have not seen that glorious hope. - I fear he has been taken by bad persons, who will teach him all wickedness, so that if he lives, he will grow up a wicked man, and I shall never behold his face in comfort." "Where is your faith, my lave ?" said her husband, "how many proyers have we poured out in his behalf? Does not God, our Saviour, hear prayer ? Be assured that he does, and that even this trial is for our good, and our lost Willie is in the hands of a kind Father, who, if he does not restore him to us here, will, in that world where there is no more sorrow." A few weeks after this, the young pair stood on the upper deck of one of our large steamers. The boat was just leaving the wharf, and all was bustle and animation. James, though he could hardly offord it, had concluded to take his wife to see a distant relation ? and they were now returning home. Mary, though fond of home, had eagerly set out, impelled by a secret hope, that, perhaps, she might meet with the robbers of her child. "If I could only hear something of him," thought she, and during the journey, her sad, viz: Massachusetts, Vermont, Kentucky and of the Gazette on this subject. He appears to mager eves rapidly searched the face of every one she met. Now she was returning, and though she felt as if she could wear out life in the search.

yet she knew she would soon be at home, where everything but reminded her of poor Willie. The boat swept off on its journey, and Mr. Heywood observed, "It is quite pleasant here, Mary. I will bring some chairs, and we will sit here awhile." He left her, and she walked to the guard, and stood, gazing at the rapidly ro
