Prance is not unacquainted with the Public Men of the country, and we have no doubt but that he is capable, without any newspaper influence or dictation to select a Cabinet, which will not only suit himself personally, but one that will in all respects meet the approbation of the Great Democratic Party of the Country.
While entertaining and expressing these views, we at the same time, conceive it to be our duty as journalists, to allow our political friends scarce a place in the memory of men; but Ci to be heard through the columns of the Morning Post. From the Butler Democratic Herald.

We notice in some of the papers the names of distinguished gentlemen mentioned in connection with the Cabinet of General Pierce, and have heard the name of General Patterson, of Philadelphia, suggested by many of our prominent Democrats, us a gentleman eminently capable and worthy of the appointment of Secretary of the War Department. Gen. Patterson is a dis-tinguished soldier of two wars—the war of 1812 and 1846. His experience in the camp and upon the battle field would enable him to form a correst judgment of the wants of the army, and bring to the discharge of the duties of the station that practicable knowledge so indispensable to a proper and satisfactory discharge of the daties that devolve upon that officer. Besides, the General's affable and courteous manners, his promptness and energy as a business man, his extensive and favorable acquaintance, extending throughout the entire country, would make the ment one of the mor appointment one of the most acceptable of the President's selections of his Cabinet officers.— Gen. Patterson's character as an estimable citizen and brave soldier, gives him a high place in Pennsylvania and the Union.

Death is to the mortal and material, indeed, a nighty leveller; and the grave knows no disinctions. The prince and the peasant lie down ogether, and repose quietly side by side, in their together, in terose and naught but the outer dis-tinction of stately cenotaph, or polished shaft, can'tell where sleeps the sleeper who toiled for his daily bread, or he of royalty, whose head was decked with diadem or crown. The modest daisysprings up as sweetly; the tiny grass-blade trembles as gently, and bends as lovingly; the murmaring winds, in their passing fleetness, tell as solemn and touching a requiem over the grave of the obscure dead, as on that of the proudest and most honored of all the earth-born. The insect of the hour, that lives in the sumer's sunbcam, as well as the lordly "eagle towering in his pride of place;" the lily of the valley, with the oak-monarch of the forest, or the loftiest cedar of Lebanon; the swelling mound, the "everlasting hills," and the hoary
