Yet we find a Pittsburgh solitor, with these reports before him, in possession of every fact ecessary for the truth, coining from his brain, ander the influence of an impulse of a most malignant nature, the sum of $800,000 to be added. the cost of the road. Such a falsehood strikes at the very vitals of this community We know of no instance of a slander so maligant, so devilish, so unprovoked, in the history our city—a slander having for its object an njury so wide-spread, so ruinous to the best interests of our community. Every paragraph in his long tirade is equally tinged with falsebood; but we have had time to do no more than to notice his items in the pile, or numerical pyramid of falsehood. The editor of the Gazette has been, from the first, malignantly, insanely opposed to the making of this road.
