He has a tolerably fair prospect, we think of dying without his eyes having been blessed with the sight of the minarets of Istamhoul; and without his name being adorned with the glory of having added the fair realm of Turkey to his wide and semi-barbarous dominions. Should the views of some late writers prove correct, we should judge the result of the conflict much more doubtful than was generally believed some time ago. The power of the public opinion of the world will gree strength to the arms of any nation struggling for existence. That public opinion is now desidedly with the Turkish nation, to cheer and encourage its efforts. That opinion did not save Poland. But it is now much more potent, and has many more means of making its power felt, than when Poland fell beneath the ruthless arm of Russia.

To show some of the resources of the Turkish government, and the enthusiasm of the people in the cause, we take the following from an English paper:

Voluntary gifts of all descriptions continued to flow into the Turkish treasury. Jewels, money, horses, houses and lands to an immense amount, were offered for the national service Eight thousand "Redifs" were armed, clothed, and equipped from the proceeds of one day's of and equipped from the process continue with ferings. Military preparations continue with unabated spirit. The Turkish steam frigates Faizl, Baori, Taif, Feridje, and Medjedic, have been sent to Beyrout to take on board 12,000 regulard of the army of Syria. Orders had been given to call out 50,000 more "Redifs," exclusive of the reserves. Of these fifty thousand, eighteen thousand are armed and equipped b the city of Constantinople. The whole number enrolled themselves in one day, and within one week the arms, clothing and horses were provided.
