For the Morning Post. THE FLIGHT OF TIME. BY WILLIAM W. SEDICE

"At the winged arrow files Boodily the mark to find : At the lightning from the skies Darks and Jeaves no trace behind the state and seaves no trace behind Beining thus our fleeting days Bear us down life's rapid streat Transient as is the meteor's flight Athwart the darkened sky; s lightning's fiash upon the night, Each moment rushes by. wift as the arrow from the bow, By practised archer shot

The hours fly past before we know, And soon are all forgot. As when the light and fleeting gale Sweeps with a hurried blast Far over sunny hilland dale, So careless days move past Softly as steals the zephyr bracze O'er fields of bending grain, O'er landscapes bright, through boy So weeks come on in train.

As like a dream of hoped-for joy, Now present and now gons ; As play-day to the impatient boy, Months come, and then are flown

mooth as a river in its flow, Where flow'ry banks lie near, The rolling seasons come and go, And form the solemn year. Replete with ills, and pain and death

With change of joy and mirth. A measuring life on earth. Thus miments, hours, days, nights and weeks, Months, seasons, years still pass; Whilst hoary Time, though volceless, speaks, "All things must fade as grass?

Yet ponder not too long, faint heart, But grasp the passing hours, And act full well a noble part, With all thy manful p Then, when life's stage is wrapped in flame. And days and years are o'er, Thou'lt pass Heavan's gates with loud accinim.
