Such is the late socount; and we hope it is correct. It shows that Turkey is not materially weakened by the result; and that Russia has "nothing to brag of" yet. Notwithstanding the vast disparity of forces the Turks fought so desperately as to show, by the result, that with an equal number of ships and guns and men, they would prove far superior to the Russians in naval warfare. The English papers are severely censuring Admiral Slade, (an Englishman,) now chief Admiral of the Turkish navy, for suffering this transport squadron, with soldiers, money and
