The project of consolidating the Pennsylvania Central and Pittsburgh and Steubenville Railroads, seems to be gaining many friends. The last named road is in fact but an extension of the former further westward, to a point where the Ohio river will be crossed by a bridge; and there it meets the Steubenville and Indiana road, which with others of the same guage extend all the way to St. Louis. It is now known that the House of Delegates of Virginia have decided by a strong vote that "it is expedient to grant the right of way across the 'Pan Handle'" for this line of road. Liberal notions in railroad matters are becoming more prevalent in all the States; and there is no doubt this right of way will be granted "all in good time." But granted or not, the road will soon be completed and
