A MATHEMATICAL PRODICY.—St. Louis papers of a recent date contain accounts of a boy, nine-teen years of age, who is gifted with almost incredible power of calculation in numbers. Has had only forty days' schooling, and has bit before, at any time; or has had only forty days' schooling, and has bit ten all over as soon as possible, and shall be the man and put him in the tombs. Louis is shout 6,250; that of the Benton ucast about 5,250. The vote of the Anti-Benton men about 5,250. The vote of the Anti-Bento gut, he says, is a natural one, as he could tell any sum equally well when three years old.

These youthful mathematical prodegies never amount to much, perhaps on the principle that schools. That little kingdom is trying to keep a smart child makes a dull man. By the way, up with the age.
