been settled not only in England, ( Bam. & Ad., 30) but in Massachu 328) New York, (7 Barb, 509) and in Pennsy vania (6 Wharton, 43). If such conversion of public street to purposes for which it was not originally designed, does operate severely upon or incorporated company, not empowered to do s by an act of the legislature, can take possession of a street and make a railroad upon it withou of a street and make a rairroad upon it without being guilty of a criminal offence, is a proposition which I am sure no lawyer would dream of making. The right of a company, therefore, to build a railroad on the street of a city, depends, like the lawfulness of all its other acts, upon the terms of its charter. Of course, when the power is given in express words there can be no diser is given in express words, there can be no dis pute about it. It would certainly strike most men upon the first look, that a railroad company with such a provision in its charter, is on danger-blocking up of the way. It is an obstacle—not an impassable barrier. To understand these words safe to interpret them according to their popular sense. Certain it is that they have sometimes been otherwise used in acts of Assembly. A law of Massachusetts provides, that " if any railroad 226,) that this did not prevent all interference with the road, but required only that it should cause the least possible inconvenience or impedi-ment. By a statute of this State, enacted in 1803. ment. By a statute of this State, enacted in 1803, the owners of lands adjoining navigable streams were permitted to build dams, provided that such dams should "not obstruct or impede the navigation of such streams, or prevent the fish from passing up the same." This Court (4 Watts, 440.) declared, that if these words were taken literally,

Let it then be conceded as a possible thing, that a railroad can be so constructed on a public street that it will not be an obstruction to its free use—that such railroad is not in any sense a nuisance per se—that a street may be occupied in common by a railroad and the public without any such inconvenience to the latter as will amount to an impediment, or abridge the freedom of its use for ordinary purposes—still it is not true (as the converse of the argument would make it) that the street is unobstructed as long as travel upon it is not entirely prevented. If it be proved that a man may squeeze himself along beside the track, or dodge across at the peril of his life, it does not follow that the use of the street is free, unobstructed, and unimpeded. We hold, therefore, that under a charter like this, a railroad cannot be built on a street in such a manner as to cause any material obstruction. If we assume, as we do, that the clause under consideration does not entirely forbid the company from going on any street, we must also allow them to create such impediments as cannot be avoided. But those which are not absolutely necessary to the making and using of the railroad, are unlawful; for managers are bound to leave the street as nearly free that the railroad has been laid down on and along a public road, called the Buffalo road, in such a way, that for some distance it cannot be, and is d most strongly against the grantor. But a grant of privileges by the State, to a body of adventurers, must be construed precisely the that fortion of the people who would otherwise ther way—in favor of the public and against the travel thereon are obliged to take another way, other way—in favor of the public and against the grantees. A prohibition, exception or reservation in a charter, must therefore stand in full force, though it destroy or make nugatory all the powers given to the company.

The act of incorporation, now before us, contains the following very emphatic clause: "The add railroad shall be so constructed as not to obstruct or impede the free use of any public road, struct or impede the free use of any public road, struct or impede the free use of any public road, struct, lane or bridge, now laid out, opened or built, or to interfere with any burial ground dwelling house or building without the consent of the owner." It would certainly strike most men upon the first look, that a railroad company with such a provision in its charter, is on dangerous ground when it takes possession of a street. It is not at all easy to understand how the people. ous ground when it takes possession of a street. It is not at all easy to understand how the people of a city can have the use of a street free from obstructions and impediments, when the street is obstructions and impediments, when the street is of ordinary width, and has two railroad tracks upon it, along which locomotive engines, with trains of cars, are running every five minutes of the day. Nor is it by any means impossible, that in this case the legislature intended to exclude the company altogether from the streets, even at the risk of having no railroad made; for the desire to preserve to the people of Erie and its neight probaced the free new of their streets and roads.

contract, surrendered the control of their road in the wish to establish a railway communication for them with New York.

An obstruction is any thing set in the way, whether it totally closes the passage or only hinders and retards progress. A road may be obstructed more or less. The word impediment is almost synonymous with obstruction, except that it is seldom, if ever, used to signify an entire blocking up of the way. It is an obstacle—not an impassable heaves are mark.

They have argued that no decree could be fiased on obstructions created by the use of the rail road because the Act of Incorporation provides only against the road being so constructed as not to impede, &c. And the bill charges nothing else. Whatever impediments are caused by the ordinary and proper use of a railroad we attribute to its construction if such impediments could have been avoided by a different construction.
