COAL IN CINCINNATI. construction of a railroad by which coal can be carried to that city at all seasons of the year They say coal of tolerable good quality can be found in Jackson county, and some other southeastern counties of Ohio, and that the supply of the Cincinnati market with coal would make a large business for the road, besides developing the Ohio coal beds. The low stage of the river for the last three or four years, until very late in the season, has damaged the manufacturing establishments of that city, and frequently brings up the price of coal to an exhorbitant figure. From twenty to thirty cents per bushel for coal, and prices of food very high, have aroused the Cincinnatians to the necessity of securing more uniform supply of coal. The river has been a poor dependence of late, and they are out of humor with it. But they will find a vast difference between the coal of Jackson county, Ohio, and Pittsburgh coal. The coal veins in that part of Ohio are not more than half as thick as in Allegheny county, and the quality far inferior. In fact, it would hardly pay to carry the coal of the eastern counties of Ohio by railgoad to Cincinnati. No coal can be carried

ployed would be greatly reduced. But all these savings would not equal the cost of rail-

coal from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati. To this add the Pittsburgh price, and it would make the price at the wharf of Cincinnati about eighteen cents per bushel. It should be good coal to bear that price the year round. The passenger engine and tender were lying at the foot of the embankment—some twenty tet high—bottom side upwards, smashed into ragments, with the smoke stack and iron porions embedded in the marsh, which at this point (Baptist Creek) stretches away on both sides of the road. The fire had been thrown completely out, and the hot cinders were smo-king in the wet grass. The first baggage car was perfectly unburt; but the second one was lashed into the first second class car, and with dashed into the first second class car, and with the latter formed an immense mass of splinters, wood work, iron work, bones, brains, mangled flesh, torn clothes, broken rifles, loaves of bread f desh, torn clothes, broken rifles, loaves of bread and other catables, jumbled together as if a mine of gunpowder had blown them into this consmous heap of rubbish. The last second-cluss car had been driven right upon the roof of the forward first-class car more than half way in length. The weight of it had crushed in the fore part of the car beneath it, leaving the rest of it uninjured, though considerably shattered.

On both sides of the embankment, below these cars, were the wounded and dring—some of them flung out violently from the wreck, others having crawled down with broken legs, while yet others had been carried to the fires by others having crawted down with broken legs, while yet others had been carried to the fires by the passengers. It is shocking even to think of the scene, as it would be utterly sickening to describe the various wounds and hideous mutilations inflicted upon the poor sufferers. Lying immediately under the rear platform of the forward first-class oar, he saw the first corpse-that of a child about three years of age. The head was frightfully swollen and discolored. He Dead Rieads.

The "dead head system" is just now a subject of deep cogitation with railroad men, and the movement is on foot to abolish it altogether. Well, let it be done. If railroad men think they are granting a charity to the press, they had better discard the grafuity altogether. Let the system be abolished, and then we may expect after escope in journalism upon the fruitful theme of the mismangement of railroads. Let it be done, and perhaps some of the recklessness and carelessness of engineers and conductors may in time be exposed. Assured are we that if there were fewer "Gead heide" on most of the roads, there would be fewer dead men with torn limbs and mutilated bodies coastered along the principal protes.

The supposition, however, that the press receives more than it gives in return for its freed done of the rail, is so utterly absert, that we wonder it was ever seriously advanced. The Albany Allas, speaking upon this subject, thus disposes of the conceited thought, in a paragraph as brief as it is pungent. It says:

Elitors pay, and pey gloroady, for all the favore shorn them. We have traveled thousands of miles free of cont, during the pastern travel. Affidavits from jurors, setting forth that they misunderstood the charge of a Judge, or misap-prehended the testimony of a witness, are re-ceived in the courts of some of the States on a motion for a new trial; the question, however, still being one in relation to which there are con flicting decisions, owing to the different views entertained on matters of public policy. This question arose, on Saturday, in the District Court, upon a motion for a new trial on the part of the contestants of the will of the late John Riddle. Judge Thurman, who stated the opinion deciding the motion, remarked that, in a clear and forcible decision in this State, it was held that if there was any rule that was to be considered as completely settled, it was that te timony in relation to misconduct of jurors should not be received; and this opinion, he conceived, was founded on the wisest reasons of public poli-or, which applied as strongly in the case of an alleged misunderstanding of the charge of the railroad to Cincinnati. No coal can be carried at present on railroads, so as to compete with the coal floated on the river.

There would be a saving in many respects in carrying on railroads. The cost of the boate would be saved. The numerous and heavyloss—would be saved. The numerous and heavyloss—the child was stone dend.

The could be deficult to sustain half the verdicts rendered in this county, if they could be set court. The court would set aside a verdict or aside on the ground that a jury had misappre-bended the instructions. The fact that the rule excluding such testimony might work injustice, was to be met by the consideration that the court could only attempt, without hoping to attain per-fection, and had to operate by general rules, in which the advantages of the rule had to be weighed against each other. On this point, therefore, and on other grounds suggested in the ar-gument, the motion for a new trial in the case
