By the blunder of a young man in a drug store, a child of Matthew Murray's, living in Philadelphia, lost its life. The mother and shild had both been ill, and the attending physician prescribed for both. The young man who put up the medicines made a mistake, and la belled both parcels incorrectly, marking that intended for the mother with the child's name, and that for the latter with Mr. Murray's name. The child died in four or five days after taking the wrong medicine, and the circumstances gave rise to the belief that the child's death was the result of the mistake.
