DAILY MORNING POST. THURSDAY MORNINGMAY 10. How GREAT ACTORS ARE MADE. - Mr. Edwin Forrest closed a very successful engagement at the Broadway theatre, New York, on Saturday evening. This night land none but he who has experienced the toil of act-ing such parts as I have been called upon nightdegree of labor, both mental and physical, required in the performance of the task. They who mistake the actor's life to be one of comparative case, mistake the fact most egregiously. My experience has shown me that it is one of unremitting toil. In no other profession in the world is high eminence so difficult to reach as in this; and this proposition becomes self-evident tronic ladder, and how few, how very few, attain its topmost round. (Applause.) My earliest ambition was to obtain distinction on the stage, and while yet a mere child, I shaped my course o reach the wished-for goal. I soon become aware that distinction in any vocation, but particularly in this, was only to be achieved by hard work, by laborious toil, and by an unfailing self-reliance. (Loud applause.) Spring has Come. The country was never more captivating in appearance than now. The meadows, pastures, wheat and clover fields, and wood lands, are lu-minous with the sheen of young grass and leaves, and the green landscapes are starred with flowers. The fruit trees are masses of blossoms, and the air is full of their sweetness. The shrubbery about tasteful homes is in full bloom and brightness. The shady hill sides are decked with "sweet Williams," and all that fair sisterhood of early blooms, whose chesen homes are "God's first Temples;" while the sunny brook-sides are thickly spotted with the yellow and shining dandelions—those golden fires that fret the valleys. The red buds are lustrous in the deep woods, gleaming out of the soft, rich green of the new leaves, like bidshes half hidgreen of the new leaves, like blashes half had den in the curls of a maiden; and the haw thorns are indeed "milkwhite," glisten like snow on the mountains, and this fragrance seems the very breath of poetry. The white lambs are skipping in the bucyance of innocence, along the fresh green hill sides; the squirrels seem the tree between the tree has been preceded. as published.
