NOTICE.

IN an advertisement of Mira Hitumé, in this paper, my na le is made use of in connection with the Hamburg Flancs. Such use is unauthorised by me, and, moreover, the matter is incorrectly stated and misapplied. The Jacks are these: About a year ago I wrote to Esumgarten & Heins, Piano makers in Hamburg, (Germany,) for a Piano of a new and peculiar construction, and of which I furnished a minute description. They replied that they did not manufacture any such, and requested me to examine a distincture and such and requested me to examine a firm offering to furn a me with a similar one; in case I liked it. I accordingly examined the instrument, but as it did, not please me, I declines purchasing of them. I have time ought and am now using a Planc from the factory of Nurses & Clark, N. Y. PHILADELPHIA. GEORGE J. HENKEL'S CITY CABINET WAREHOUSE,
No. 173 CHESTNOT STREET,
(OPPOSITE INDEPENDENCE HALL)
Philadelphia:

I had come now to that time in my life when I. must choose a profession. I resolved to become a physician, from the feeling of making such reparation to humanity as I was able, for the life I had destroyed. I thought if I could save life, if I could alleviate suffering and bring blessing instead of effliction, that I might somewhat tone for my guilt. If not to the individual, yet to humanity at large. None ever clung to a profession with more ardor than I undertook the study of medicine; for it seemed to me my only way of salvation, if, indeed, that were yet possible—a salvation to be worked out not only by chastisement and control of my passions, but by active good among my fellow men.

I shall never forget the first patient I attended. It was a painful case, where there was much suffering, and to the relations—to the poor mother above all—bitter anguish. The child had been given over by the doctors, and I was called in as the last untried from despair, not from hope. I ordered a new remedy, one that feet was almost miraculous, and, as the little or the post of the would have the courage to persoribe.

Set I could alleviate suffering and bring blessing instead of effliction, that I might somewhat tone for my guilt. If not to the individual, yet to humanity at large. None ever clung to a profession with more ardor than I undertook the study of medicine; for it seemed to me my only way of salvation; if, indeed, that were yet possible—a salvation to be worked out not only by constituent to the port of ment in the United States.

would deeds of reparation dispel that dakness which a mere objectionless punishment—a mere mental repentance—could not touch?

This experience gave me renewed courage. I devoted myself more ardently to my profession, theirly among the poor, and without remuneration. Had I ever accepted money I believe that all my power would have gone. And as! I saved more and more lives, and lightened more and more the heavy burden of human suffering, the dreadful shadow grew fainter.

I was called suddenly to a dying lady. No name was given me. neither was her station in life nor her condition told me. I hurried off without caring to ask questions, careful only to heal.

When I reached the house I was taken into a room where she lay in a fainting fit on the bed. Even before I ascertained her malady—with that almost second sight of a practical physician.

that almost second sight of a practical physician —her wonderful beauty struck me. Not meraly because it was beauty, but because it was a face strangely familiar to me, though new; strangely speaking of a former love—sithough in all my practice I had never loved man or woman individually.

30 SEPH MOGRIDGE, aug. 8t. Louis, Missouri. TO LET, FOR SALE, &c.

I roused the lady from her faintness but not without much troutle. It was more like death than swoning, and yielded to my treatment stubbornly. I remained with her for may hours; but when I left her she was better. It was obliged to leave her, to attend a poor work house child.

I had not been gone long—carrying with me that fair face lying in its death like trance, with all its golden hair scattered over the pillow, and the blue lids weighing down the eyes, as one carries the remembrance of a sweet song sweetly sung—carrying it, too, as a talisman egainst the dread shadow which hung closer on me to-night, the darkness too, deepen into its original blackness, and the chilling into its original blackness, and the chilling heavily on my heart again—when a messenger hurried after me, telling me the lady was dying, and I was to go back immediately. I wanted no second bidding. In a moment, as it seemed to me, I was in her room again. It was dark.

The lady was dying now, paralyzed from her feet upwards. I saw the death ring mount higher of the dreads and higher; that faint, bluish ring with which death marries some of his byides. I bent every onergy, every thought to the combat. I ordered remedies so strange to the ordinary rules of medicine, that it was with difficulty the obemist death marries some of his biddes. I bent every coregy, every thought to the combat. I ordered of remedies so strange to the ordinary rules of medicine, that it was with difficulty the chemist would prepare them. She opened her eyas fall upon me, and the whole room was filled with the cry of "Murderer" They thought the lady had spoken feverielly in her death trance. I alone knew from whence that ory had come.

But I would not yield, and I never quailed, nor feared the result. I knew the power I had to battle with, and I knew too, the powers I had to battle with, and I knew too, the powers I wielded. They saved her. The blood circulated as wielded. They saved her. The blood circulated again through her veins, the faintness gradually dispersed, the smitten side flung off its parlysis, and the blue ring faded wholly from her limbs. The lady recovered under my care. And care, such as mothers lavieh on their children I poured itself like a boundless flood. It knew that her pulses heat at my bidding. I knew that her pulses heat at my bidding. I knew that lad given her back her life, which clese had been foffeit, and that I was her preserver. I almost worship ed her. It was the worship of my whole being the boundless flood. It was my life I gave her—my destiny that I saw in her—my deliveror from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers, from the curse of sin, as I had been hers afrom a souther men or no; I never dreamed of her lovely as other men or no; I never dreamed of her lovely as other men or no; I never dreame
