certainly nothing was then farther from my thoughts than Joseph or little Samuel. "No mother." I answered at length,-half ashamed o own what it was, after this expression of her maternal hope, —" not exactly that, though I do want to be a good boy and nobody can say I don't; but now I was thinking of something else.

Oh, mother," mustering up my courage, "I want a pail! a little tin pail! mine?" squatting on my bare toes before her and looking earnestly into her face. "And where is it to come from,

Harry ?" she asked. Alas, it was a question "The peddlers!" I reared triumphantly, sup-"The peddlers!" I reared triumphantly, sup-posing I had gotten over the mount of difficulty; "the peddlers! the next time one comes, won't you buy me a tin pail—my pail to milk my calf-in?" "Harry forgets how little we have to buy it with," said my mother. "But, mother, you know Bossy will give milk soon, and she must have a pail, and then I can milk, and it will help you so, mother." How weighty my arguments might have seem-od had she the wherewithal for the purchase, I have no means of knowing; as it was, she paited me on the head, saying. "by and by Harry will be able to earn one himself, and that will be mether"

And this was the first and last of Bossy's pail. The next person to whom I wanted to commu-licate my good fortune was Joshua Popper; but is home being some miles distant, no opportu-ity occurred for this purpose until the follow-ing Sunday, when I suddenly seized him by the jacket in the porch of the old meeting house, as ae was about following his father up the aigle.

You don't know what I've got !" I whispered ritedly in his ear, but not so low as to escape the hearing of his father, who turned round taking his boy by the hand, abruptly terminated our intercourse. Joshua and I were great friends when the winter school kept and we attended. This season we were both at work, and conse-quently seldom met except on the Sabbath, when during the short interval of Sabbath services, we often strolled away and ate our dinners together in a neighboring grove, or on the grass-grown graves of the churchyard, or in the cool shade of the long shed built for the accommodation of all church going horses. For in those days there was no Sabbath schools to pasture the lambs of the flock, so that we were, perhaps, sometimes in danger of becoming goats. How I longed for the close of the morning ser-vice, and when over, how I tried to moderate my engorness to find him. "Here I am," he cried, twitching me by the sleeve, "come;" and he led the way to a neigh-haring well, while I lost no time in setting him

"Well," he cried, impatiently, "I can't guess. Now tell me what it is. I should think it was most likely to be a new knife, only you say it

"No! no!" I shouled, charmed with his ill success, "no! It is a calf! cur Boss!-Father. has given her to me; he said so! she's mine!" "Boss yours!" and be looked delightfully incredulous. "You got a calf! How good it was in your father. I suppose you know that I've got a lamb?" I knew it.

"Aud now, Harry," he stopped and took me by the slove as if a great thought was striking him, "will the calf's calves be yours? That's the question. Will Bossie's Bossies be your
