The city was like a vast bar-rack, where military movements and the spirit of war threw everything else into the shade. The Emperor was indefatigable in introducing improvements into the army; and in order to give a fresh impetus to the ambition of officers, he had commanded that the names of such former pupils of the military schools as had sig-nalized themselves by acts of heroism should be nanced themselves by acts of nervisin should be engraved on marble slabs, and placed up in the buildings where they were educated. The first names to be honored in this way are those of Baumgarten, Citate, 1853; Tchcgoleff, Odessa, 1854; and Tottleben, Sebastopol, 1854.
