WHOLESALE GROCERS,

d r	CARD,  A FEW days since, I published an advertisement of my Hamsuno Pianos, in which an extract from a letter from Prof. H. Rohbock, of this city, addressed to Messrs. Baumgarten & Heins, of Hamburg, the manufacturers, was inserted. This morning I observed in several of the daily papers a "Notice," signed by Prof. R., in which he states that I was unauthorized to make use of it, and that	WHOLESALE GROCERS, PRODUCE AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS. As regards the assertion as to its incorrect- mess, I have the letter in my possession, and it speaks for itself, word for word as I have published. Messrs. Baum- garten & Heins are not dependant upon Mr. Robbock for endotsement—their Planos were known, appreciated and reselved the highest rommendations from the first artists, long before Prof. R. saw fit to pass su option upon them. BRADDOCK'S EXPED	ITION.
[FROM WASHINGTON IRVING'S LIF WASHINGTON.]	E OF GEORGE

	He was still unable to bear the jolting of the wagon, but it needed another interposition of the kindly intended authority of General Braddock, to bring him to a halt at the great crossings of the Youghlogeny. Here the general assigned him a guard; provided him with ne-١.	cessaries, and requested him to remain, under 1	care of his physician, Dr. Craik, until the arrival of Colonel Dunbar's detachment, which was ١.	two days' march in the rear; giving him his l	word of honor that he should, at all events, be ١	word of nonor that he buoting at an events, he ١	enabled to rejoin the main division before it ļ	reached the French fort.*
١	This kind solicitude on the part of Braddock,
١	shows the real estimation in which he was held l	by that officer. Doctor Craik backed the geneł	ral's orders, by declaring that should Washing-l	ton persevere in his attempts to go in the con-Ì	dition he then was, his life would be in danger.
۱	Orme also joined his entreaties, and promised,
I	if he would remain, he would keep him inform-l	ed by letter of every occurrence of moment.
l	Notwithstanding all the kind assurances of ļ	Notwithstanding all the kind assurances of Braddock and his side do campe Orme, it was ١	with gloomy feelings that Washington saw the l	troops depart, fearful he might not be able to 1	rejoin them in time for the attack upon the fort, ì	which, he assured his brother aide-de-camp, he Į	would not miss for five hundred pounds.
į	Leaving Washington at the Youghiogheny, we ١	will follow the march of Braddock. In the ļ	course of the first day, (June 24,) he came to a İ	deserted Indian camp; judging from the num-Į	ber of wigwams, there must have been about one hundred and seventy warriors. Some of the Í	trees about it had been stripped, and painted, with threats, and bravadoes, and sourrilous 1	taunts written on them in the French language, showing that there were white men with the Bavages.
	The next morning, at daybreak, three men venturing beyond the sentinels, were shot and

١	The next morning, at daybreak, three men
١.	venturing beyond the sentinels, were shot and ١	scalped; parties were immediately sent out to
.	scour the woods, and drive in the stray horses.
	The day's march passed by the Great Meadows
.	and Forth Necessity, the scene of Washington's capitulation. Several Indians were seen hover-c	ing in the woods, and the light horse and Indian
•	allies were sent out to surround them, but did :	not succeed. In crossing a mountain beyond the •	Great Meadows, the carriages had to be lowered with the assistance of the sailors, by means of
-	tackle. The camp for the night was about two miles beyond Fort Necessity. Several French
;	and Indians endeavored to reconnoitre it, but
:	were fired upon by the advanced soutinels.
	The following day (26th) there was a labori-
,	ons march of but four miles, owing to the difficulties of the road. The evening hait was at another deserted Indian camp, strongly posted 3	on a high rock, with a steep and parrow accent;
	it had a spring in the middle, and stood at the 9	termination of the Indian path to the Mononga-1	hela. By this pass the party had come which
•	attacked Washington the year before, in the
-	Great Mesdows. The Indians and French, too.
n · 8	who were hovering about the army, had just left 8	this camp. The fires they had left were vet d	this camp. The fires they had left were yet burning. The French had inscribed their
٠.	names on some of the trees with insulting bra-8	vadoes, and the Indians had designated in tri-þ	umph the scalps they had taken two days previ-f	ouely. A party was sent out with guides, to 3	follow their tracks and fall on them at night, but ņ	again without success. In fact, it was the In-
B.	dian boast, that throughout this march of Braddock, they saw him every day from the
if	the mountains and expected to be able to shoot

1	The march continued to be tollial and difficult;
١	on one day it did not exceed two miles, having
1	to cut a passage over a mountain. In cleaning 1	their guns the men were ordered to draw the charge, instead of firing it off. No fire was to
e.	be lighted in front of the pickets. At night the men were to take their arms into the tents with ſ	them.
,	Further on, the precautions became still greater. On the advanced pickets the men were
f.	in two divisions, relieving each other every two ,	hours. Half remained on guard with fixed bay-d
١.	The picket sentinels were doubled.
i- n	On the 4th of July they encamped on Thickņ	etty Run. The country was less mountainous
-	etty but. The country was ices mountainous ш	and rocky, and the woods, consisting chiefly of n h,	white, pine were more open. The general now

Fort Duquesno. Ever since his halt at the deserted camp on the brock beyond the Great Meadows, he had endeavored to prevail upon the Crogban Indians to ecout in the direction of the fort, and bring him intelligence, but never could succeed. They had probably been deterred by the number of French and Indian tracks, and by the recent capture of Secreogradi. This day, however, two consented to reconneitre; and shortly after their departure, Christopher Gist, the resolute pioneer, who acted as guide to the general, likewise set off as a scott.

The Indians returned on the 6th. They had been close to Fort Duquesnes. There were no additional works there; they saw a few boats additional works there; they saw a lew house nader the fort, and one with a white flag coming down the Ohio; but there were few men to be seen, and few tracks of any. They came upon an unfortunate officer; shooting him within half a mile of the fort, and brought a scalp as a trophy of his fate. None of the passes between the camp and fort were occupied; they be-lieved there were few men abroad reconnoiter-

Gist returned soon after them. His account corroborated theirs; but he had seen smoke in a corroborated theirs; but he had seen smoke in a valley between the camp and the fort, made probably by some scouting party. He had intended to prowl about the fort, but had been discovered, and pursued by two Indians, and narrowly escaped with his life.

Had Braddock been schooled in the warfare of woods, or had he adopted the suggestion of Washington, which he rejected so impatiently, he would have thrown out Indian scouts or Virginia rangers in the navance: and on the flanks, to ginia rangers in the advance, and on the flanks, to beat up the woods and ravines; but as has been sarcastically observed, he suffered his troops to march forward through the centre of the plain, mile of the Section to Education cannot be surpassed, and with merely their usual guides and flanking ts convenience of the city renders it among the most desipport of flanking parties, "as if in a review in St. James' Park." It was now near two o'clock. The advanced party and the working party had crossed the plain and were ascending the rising ground. Braddock was about to follow with the main Braddock was about to follow with the main body, and had given the word to march, when he heard an excessively quick and heavy firing in front. Washington, who was with the general, surmised that the evil he had apprehended had come to pass. For want of scouting parties aliead the advance parties were suddenly and warmly attacked. Braddock ordered Licutenant-Colonel Burton to hasten to their assistance with the vanguard of the main body, eight hunwith the vanguard of the main body, eight hundred strong. The residue, four hundred, were hatted, and posted to protect the artillery and

In firing continued, with fearful yelling. There was a terrible uproar. By the general's orders an aide de camp spurred forward to bring in an account of the nature of the attack. Without watting for his return the general himself, finding the turmoil increase, moved forward, leaving. Sir Peter Halket with the command of the baggage. The was composed of two companies by surprise. It was composed of two companies by surprise. It was composed of two companies to carpentars or nioneers to cut the road, and two flank companies of grenadiers to protect them. Suddenly the engineer who preceded them to mark out the road gave the alarm, French and Indians!" A body of them was approaching rapidly, cheered on by a Frenchmaniu a gaily fringed hunting shirt, whose gogget showed him to be an officer.

Col. Jeff. Davis, Secretary of War, arrived at Jackson, Miss., on the 2d inst., after an absence of two years, and was honored with a salute, and a public welcometat the capitol, where he was addressed by Gov. McRae. The Secretary made an appropriate response. which was tary made an appropriate response, which was heartly greated.
