I. W. CHADWICK, Dealer in Kentucky Leaf Tobacco, RAGS AND PAPER, A FEW days since, I published an advertisement of my Hamburg Planos, in which an extract from a letter from Prof. H. Rohbock, of this city, addressed to Messrs. Baumgarten & Helins, of Hamburg, the manufacturers, was inserted. This morning I observed in several of the daily papers a "Notice," signed by Prof. R., in which he states that I was unauthorized to make use of it, and that it was incorrectly stated and applied.

In reply—I presumed that if he had written the letter, he, of course, meant what was therein contained, and consequently required no authority from him to make the same public. As regards the sesertion as to its incorrectness, I have the letter in my possession, and it speaks for itself, word for word as I have published. Messrs Baumgarten & Heins are not dependent upon Mr. Rohbock for endoisement—their Planos were known, appreciated and received the highest rommendations from the first artists, link of the profit is and the same well known in the city, and not be suse his recommendation was necessary to establish the merit of the Planos. In conclusion, I may add that they stand on their own merit, and are endorsed by such men as List, Thalberg, and others, solely on account of their merit.

DAILY MORNING POST. TUESDAY MORNINGJUNE 19. BRADDOCK'S EXPEDITION.

many of the pioneers were she Not a plateon would quit the line of march. They were more dismayed by the yells than by the rifles of the unseen savages.

FROM WASHINGTON IRVING'S LIFE OF GEORGE CONCLUDED ? There was a sharp firing on both sides at first. Several of the enemy fell; among them their leader; but a murderous fire broke out from among trees and a ravine on the right, and the woods resounded with unearthly whoops and yellings. The Indian rifle was at work, leveled by unseen hands. Most of the grenadiers and Gage ordered his men to fix bayonets and form in order of battle. They did so in hurry and trepidation. He would have scaled a hill on the right whence there was the severest firing.

tended themselves along the hill and in the ravines; but their whereabouts was only known by their demoniac cries and the puffs of smoke from their rifles. The soldiers fired wherever they saw the smoke. Their officers tried in vain All orders were unheeded; in their fright they shot at random, killing some of their own flanking parties, and of the vanguard, as they came running in. The covert fire grew more intense. In a short time most of the officers and many of the men of the advance were killed or wounded. Colonel Gage himself received a wound. The advance fell back in dismay upon Sir John St. Clair's corps, which was equally dismayed. The Colonel Burton had come up with the reinforcements, and was forming his men to face the rising ground on the right, when both of the do; rising ground on the do; advanced detachments f By this time the general was upon the ground. He tried to rally the men. "They would fight," they said, "if they could see their enemy; but it is uscless to fire at trees and bushes, and they could not stand to be shot down by an invisible The colors were advanced in different places to separate the men of the two regiments. Tha general ordered the officers to form the men, tell them off into small divisions, and advance with them; but the soldiers could not be prevailed upon either by threats or entreaties. The Virginia troops, accustomed to the Indian mode of fighting, scattered themselves, and took post behind trees, where they could pick off the lurking foe. In this way, they, in some degree, pro-tected the regulars. Washington advised Generel Braddock to adopt the same plan with the regulars; but he persisted in forming them into platoons; consequently they were out down from behind logs and trees as fast at they could called them cowards, and even struck them with evice in this manner, were slain by the fire of he regulare, directed wherever a smoke appear ed among the trees.

The officers behaved with consummate brave ry; and Washington beheld with admiration those who, in camp or on the march, had appeared to him to have an almost effeminate re posed to imminent death, with a courage that vain hope of inspiriting the men to drive off the enemy from the flanks and regain the cannon, they would dash forward singly of in groups. horseback, or who appeared to have command. Some were killed by random shot of their own men, who, crowded in masses, fired with af-frighted rapidity, but without aim. Soldiers in the front ranks were killed by those in the rear. Between friend and foe, the slaughter was terri ble. All this while the woods resounded with the uncarthly yellings of the savages, and now and then, one of them, hideously painted, and ruffling with feathered crest, would rush forth to scalp an officer who had fallen, or sieze a horse galloping wildly without a rider. Throughout this disastrous day, Washington distinguished himself by the courage and pres-ence of mind. His brother aids, Orms and Morris, were wounded and disabled early in the action, and the whole duty of carrying the or-ders of the general devolved on him. His danders of the general devolved on him. His dan-ger was imminent and incessant: He was in every part of the field, a conspicuous mark for the murderous rifle. Two horses were shot un-der him. Four bullets passed through his coat. His escape without a wound was almost mirac-ulous. Dr. Craik, who was on the field attend-ing to the wounded watched him with anxiing to the wounded, watched him with anxiety as he rode about in the most exposed manner, and used to say that he expected every moment to see him fall. At one time he was sent to the main body to bring the artillery into action. All there was likewise in confusion; for the Indians had extended themselves along the ravine so as to flank the reserve and carry slaughter into their ranks. Sir Peter Halket slaughter into their ranks. Sir-Peter thiset had been shot down at the head of his regiment. The men who should have served the guns were paralyzed. Had they raked the ravines with grape-shot, the day might have been saved. In his ardor, Washington sprang from his horse; wheeled and pointed a brass field piece with his own hand, and directed an effective discharge into the woods; but neither his efforts nor example were of avail. The men could not be tent to the guns.

field, in the desperate hope of retrieving the fortunes of the day. The Virginia rangers, who had been most efficient in covering his position, offered.
One-third cash; balance in one and two years, set. The rout now became complete. Baggage, stores, artillery, everything was abandoned The wagoners took each a horse out of his team and fied. The officers were swept off with the men in this headlong flight. It was rendered more precipitate by the shouts and yells of the more precipitate by the shout and some savages, numbers of whom rushed forth from their coverts, and pursued the fugitives to the river side, killing several as they dashed across in tumultuous confusion. Fortunately for the latter, the victors gave up the pursuit in their esgerness to collect the spoil.

The shattered army continued its flight after it had crossed the Monorgabela, a wretched cently gleamed along its banks, confident of vic-tory. Out of eighty-six officers, twenty six had been killed, and thirty-six wounded. The number of rank and file killed and wounded was upwards of seven hundred. The Virginia corps bad suffered the most; one company had been almost annihilated, another, besides those kill-ed and wounded in the ranks, had lost all its
