is scarcely to be recognized by a person who has known it ten years ago, so much has it im-proved in appearance and comfort. Whole streets, to the extent of miles, have been torn down to make room for palaces, others have been widened or newly paved, and many have been added in the form of modern improvements. Taste and magnificence are displayed everywhere, while increased cleanliness adds to the genoral comfort of the inhabitants. In this manner thousands of laborers are usefully employed and you have the realization of the idea of national workshops launched by Louis Blanc, without the terrible conflict between master and workman which Louis Blanc unfortunately provoked, and which lost to the Republic some of its most substantial friends.
