THE TWO WAYS. BY T. S. ARTHUR.

James Lewis was fifteen years old. Like many lade of his age, he felt at times, that the parental hand which sought to guide him aright, draw upon the rein too often. He wished to do many things that his father disapproved, and often be came imputient when checked by one wiser and could realize the fact that he was in his father?

The shock startled him from his dream.

All was dark in the chamber where James Nor do they comprehend the loving and thoughtful care, deepening often into nuxleus solicitude, with which they are ever regarded. We do not greatly wonder at this, be-cause the minds of children are not perfected, and their store of experience is sm they are able to understand what their parents teach them, and to act more wisely than if fol lowed only their own inclinations. And it is to help them to act more wisely, and thus to secure happiness in the future, that their parents and friends so often present good precepts to their minds, correct in them what they see to be wrong, and seek so constantly to turn their feet into ways of safety. But we were going to relate something about a lad named James Lewis, who was fifteen years old. A boy who has gained that age, generally has his mind pretty well stored from books, and he is able to think on a good many subjects. And he is, moreover, very apt to have a good opinion of himself, and to believe that he knows, even better than his father, what is best for James was just such a lad as we have here pictured, and his father often felt troubled about im, when he saw how perseveringly he sought to have his own way, even though it was not op-

his eyes, and he stepped aside to gather them But their odor was so offensive that he threw them to the earth quickly. Another flower tempted him by its beauty; but, in plucking it, be tore his hands with thorns.

Pausing now, he looked back, and the wish crose in his mind that he had taken the other road. He would have retraced his steps, but he remembered the serpent at the fountain, and feared to go by that dangerous place again he moved on once more Far in advance there opened before him a beautiful prospect and he pessed on to enjoy the same. [From the Cincinnati Gazette, July 13] It will be remembered that Brigadier General Sargent issued an order to the various regiments, battalions, and companies of the Third Brigade, First Division, O V. Militia, to assemble on Broadway, on the 4th of July, at 6 A. M., for a brigade parade. The Rover regiment, Col. Kennett, obeyed the order, while the German regiment, Major Frank Linck, and the Irish battalion, Lieut, Col. H. McGrosty, disobeyed the order, and sent notice to the commandment f the brigade to that effect. For this insubordination and disobedience orders, together with a belief that the arms wil better serve the interests of the Third Brigade in other hands, Gen.
