The content of the collision took place about three-quarters of the collision three-quarters of the disgust, it appears to me that rather too much stress is put upon the project of annexing the Platte counties to Kansas. This is altogether out of probability; for even if Missouri could be so absurd as to part with so valuable a part of her territory, the annexation could not be valid without an act of Congress. The Territory of Kansas and its boundaries are positively defined by act of Congress, and there is no other authority in the United States competent to enlarge or diminish its extent while it is a territory. This could only be done by the concurrent action of the State of Kansas and the State of Missouri.

But Kansas is not a State yet, and can have no such power until she becomes one. I don't fear anything from this scheme.
