DAILY MORNING POST. WEDNESDAY MORNINGAUGUST 15. From the Boston Gazette The Vermont Temperance

Taster.

The appointment of temperance men as town agents for the purchase of liquor under the new law, has been the cause of not a little amusement, for, dependent upon their own judgment, they have in some cases purchased the veriest trash possible, at the highest rates. Some temperance men of "fourteen years standing" have been obliged to taste so often of Inte, that several ruby noses have appeared in the community, while others, it is feared by this reformatory law will be led back to evil ways. An agent for a Boston estab-lishment was in Vermont a few weeks since, selling supplies of "the genuine" to those appointed by the town to purchase. He reached a retired village one day, and having ascertained that Squire Snow was the dignitary who was to procure the supply, he called upon that gentleman, who was at work in his barn, where he received the gentleman from Boston, who carried him a generous supply of samples in a convenient leather case.

"Yes," said Squire Snow, seating him-self on a wheelbarrow, while his friend took a seat on a barrel, "they wanted me to buy the rum, cause you see in old times I used to drink some—I said some—and I s'pose they thought I was a judge—but I ain't, for it's twenty years since I tasted of any.

"Do you propose to buy a general as-

"Well, I don't know," was the reply, as if in doubt, "but I can't buy without testing the quality, can I?" The reply was of course confirmatory, and the old oaken bucket was filled with water and a couple of tumblers were soon in requisition, and they pledged their mutual health n bumpers. "I declare, that's very nice," said the Squire, looking at the bottom of his tumbler. "That old Bourbon won't hurt any one. We must have about twenty gallons "How's the crops?" asked the seller, of that." long reply was made by the farmer, who wound up by enquiring if he had a sample of old Holland. "Here it is, sir." The Squire took a snuff and exclaimed,

"I declare, it smells just as it used to. Old Holland is healthy, I believe?"—(he took another snuff,) "I used to drink old Hollands before you was born." He took another snuff and then he poured out a smiler, and the tumblers was again emptied, with a smack of the Squire's lips which made Old Dobbin in the corner, start up with amazement, and his master exclaim
