olutionists with arms without being subject to sparch and seizure. The administration very properly declined making any reply whatever, and Kossuth's letter remained unanswered.

This the Gazette thinks was a great outrage, and the administration is taken to task roundly for not deciding important international questions before they arise. It seems then, that, in the opinion of the Gazette, if any man in Europe is trying to get up a revolution against the Austrian, Russian, Italian, or even French governments, he may write to the President of the United States and ask if help may be expected from him; and the Prosident is bound to make answer. The very statement of the proposition reveals its absurdity. If the President should answer that he would assist the revolutionists it would involve our government with the existing governments of Europe, and the Gazette and its friends would condemn that indiscretion at once. If he answers that no assistance will be given they condemn him for want of sympathy with the cause of liberty. rions for us at the same rates as required at this discretion at once.
