MR. BANNAN:-Some months ago, tenteel looking man came to our store, and there being a customer in at the time, he took a chair and sat down until that customer was served and left the store, with expectant auditors, female as well at male.

He then came up to me, (I was alone) and Of ladies, the array was greater than we have He then came up to the, (I was alone) and said in an under tone of voice, "please to put a quart of whiskey in this bottle," t(at the same time taking one from under his move was made by a Senator for a temporary coat.) I replied, we have not got the article, coat.) I replied, we have not got the article, nor do we keep ardent spirits of any kind whatever. The man looked somewht astonished, and replied. "What! you do not sell any, eh?" I replied, no, sir. Well, (said he) it is cheap! only 'levenpenny-bit a quart!" And with that he left the store. I pondered upon those words, it is cheap," and Isthought of how many

But now, O'! how changed; ragged, dirty, and miserably drupk, because "it is so cheap." I passed on-and prayed, "lead me not into temptation." U. H. C.

FOR THE MINERS' JOURNAL

Good breeding is a thing admired by all sort of folks—the lady you informed us of a few days ago, Mrs. Pence, with her four farthings, was a notable instance of this quality, and deserved all the favorable John Brahan, notice you have given her.

Now, there are bases among the other sex equally worthy of distinction, where good breeding is so deeply grounded, that they are always ready to volunteer to instruct and entertain all by standers; and are-so considerate lest their friends' lungs should be affected by any participation, that when any one may venture a remark. he is cut short about the middle of his first sentence, that he may listen to the superior sapience of good breeding.

ICHABOD CRANE. UNITED STATES SENATE.

Washington, Feb. 19th.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented his in structions from the Legislature of Pennsylvania. Mr. Bk remarked, in presenting his instructions, that the pecul ar po ition in which he had beed placed would, he hoped, lungs, and that great apprehension was enterexcuse him for any remarks he might make upon the present occasion. He said he defended the Sub-Treasury Bill at the Special Session and since that time his good opinions of the measure and the Bill before the Senate had been confirmed and increased. But, continued Mr. B. I have received instructions from a power which I believe dompetent to instruct, and which, therefore, I must hear with respect and attention.

It has been said by some men at home that I ought not to obey these instructions. With my well, known opinions upon the doctrine of instruction I cannot listen to such admonitions. I am not the man to preach one thing and practice another, and having so long preached the doctrine of instruction it does not become me now to deny it. But shall I obey or resign?" This seems to be the question which I feel compelled put to myself. I do not think The fire broke out in the carpenter's shop, where that this is a case requiring resignation.

no fire had been in use during the day, nor had As at present advised, therefore, I shall any candle been used—it is therefore generally believed that the destruction of the Theatre was not resign, believing that nothing but an not resign, believing that nothing but an extreme case will admit of resignation on the part of any Senator who has been in structed. I shall therefore obey my instructed. I shall therefore obey my in-structions and vote against the bill, and in all its amendments I shall vote as a fair and It had been proposed to give Mr. Cooke a benefit honourable opponent of the bill should at this house on Thursday next, but now the man vote. I shall apply the torture to myself ager and proprietors have been reduced to pre-however reductant I may be to do so, and however much I may regret the necessity which compels me to oppose the bill.

In conclusion, Mr. Buchanan commended that part of his resolutions, of instruc non which spoke favorably of Mr. Van Bu ren and the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress. After due consultation with his colleague he said he should move a postponement of the Sub-Treasury Bill to the next Session
