

POSTSCRIPT.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Before the paper goes to press, we have barely time to say that the undersigned having visited Huntington for the purpose of investigating the charges against David R. Porter, have returned fully satisfied that they are sustained by the records and other written evidence, a portion of which will be laid before the public as early as possible.

ANDREW RUSSEL. BENJAMIN BANNAN.

Life of John H. Stonebraker attempted by the Perjury Party.

On Tuesday night between 2 and 3 o'clock, while John H. Stonebraker was lying asleep in his Shantee about 9 miles above Huntington, with another gentleman named Taylor, he was fired at by some miscreant or miscreants, with three guns or pistols, two of which struck in the legs an inch or two above the bed cover, and one passed through one of the crevices. Fortunately neither of the parties were injured.

This has the blood and sedition law been revived among us, thus has the Tory Ingersoll's advice been taken, and thus have the friends of Porter shown that they are willing to add murder—the midnight murder of a sleeping man to shield the reputation of a perjured monster!

Our First Victory.

STAND OUT FOR JUSTICE!! And Election of Inspectors!! We commence this morning the record of the first series of brilliant victories. In the stand out for Judges, the Perjury Party showed no opposition, but gave in without a struggle! The course was walked over by the Friends of Ritner and the vote stood thus:

Democratic Whig. Loco Foco. Inspector, 305 168 Assessor, 305 168

Whig Majority 137!

On the 2nd Tuesday of October we will poll upwards of 500 votes for Joseph Ritner!

The Dealer and his Agents.

Uncle Sam was in the Coal Business in our Borough a few years ago, and a stout, hale, hearty old gentleman he was; his word was as good as his bond, and that would be taken for any amount. He opened veins at Minersville, Mill Creek, Tamaqua, and on the Broad Mountain. Mr. Jones was his agent at Minersville; Mr. Brown, at Schuylkill Haven; Mr. Green, at Port Carbon; Mr. Black, at Tamaqua, and his chief clerk and overseer at Pottsville, was Mr. Knowall. At this time, every Saturday night each of these agents sent a written statement to Uncle Sam of the business of the week, how much coal was shipped, and all the proceeds in money was placed in his credit in the Bank by Messrs. Jones, Brown, Green and Black.

By this mode of proceeding, Uncle Sam became a man of substance; he had a perfect check on all his agents; they could not take advantage of him, and indeed we doubt whether Messrs. Jones, Brown, Green and Black would have done so if they could. He paid off all his debts—for Uncle Sam's friends lent him money to begin business, and had enough to lend each of his large family of children some, to open new veins, run rail roads, &c. on their own account. Things went on swimmingly; whenever Uncle Sam wanted two or three thousand dollars, he only had to draw his check, give it to Mr. Knowall, and it was cashed. He had the happiness of seeing neat little shantees, and little clusters of cottages grow up about his lands, and every thing smiling in prosperity.

One night after business was over, Uncle Sam was enjoying his pipe, when a knock was heard at the door. "Come in!" says Uncle Sam. The door opened, and Mr. Knowall walked in.

"Ah, how do you do this evening my lad, come in. I was just wishing for you to make a rare hit, and take a glass of ale with me. Sit down, sit down!"

Now Amos Knowall knew this would be the case—he knew Uncle Sam was an epicure, that he always kept fine cheese, and he loved it as well as if he had been born a rat—he was always nibbling, nibbling. He could make a Welsh rarebit too, as if he had been bred in a kitchen. After they had eat and drank, business matters were talked over.

What that conversation was, has never been correctly known, but the next day Uncle Sam went in a devil of a huff to the Bank, took all his money out and told Mr. Knowall to write to Messrs. Jones, Brown, Green and Black, forbidding them to make any deposits in such a monstrous bad place, but to keep the money arising from his business, for him themselves.

changed—from being a quiet, sober, staid old gentleman, he began immediately experimenting in the most extravagant manner possible. In the first place, he ran near two hundred yards of tunnel through solid rock, and arrived at a fine vein; he then had it blocked up and wouldn't use it, because he thought of a patent steam drill he had invented, and ran another immediately along side of it. The Miners thought the old one best, but Uncle Sam never would listen to it. He had all the wood work of his coal cars—the sleepers of his rail ways—the handles of his picks removed and iron substituted—he even had silver tubes made for blasting instead of cartridge paper, and kept no account books, for he would every thing should be on a metallic basis, and he damned all paper sky high. He hired several more clerks and agents whom he scattered about the works, charging each one as he valued his patronage not to deposit a single cent in the Bank. One poor fellow was turned off about three months afterwards, because he received a ten dollar bill of theirs in payment of a debt which he had been trying to collect for many years, and another because he was afraid to keep so much money about him that belonged to another, and therefore told Uncle Sam plainly that he should use the Bank.

Affairs went on in this way some time, till winter came on—and then the coal business was bad—navigation closed, and it was all pay out, and nothing coming in. Uncle Sam one day wanted to raise $2500 and sent to Mr. Jones at Minersville for the money. Mr. Jones had sold about 3000 tons of coal for him, and he could now square off. Mr. Knowall mounted his horse for Mr. Jones, but great was his surprise to find his horse shut! Mr. Jones, Mrs. Jones and all the little Jones's had gone to the Western Country! Uncle Sam when he heard it, scratched his head, muttered something about ingratitude—could not raise the money, and had his note protested. The next day he went to some other persons who used one of his rail roads, and to two or three persons who lived in his houses to get their rents. He was at first unwilling to take bank bills, but was at last compelled to—and so he settled his protested note. But he took a hearty damn at the Bank, President, Cashier, Directors and all, and swore if he had leisure he'd be shipping himself off to Arabia.

The next Saturday came—he had some thousands to pay his workmen; he sent to Mr. Brown, at Schuylkill Haven for money. Mr. Brown had been opening veins on his own account—did not expect Uncle Sam would call on him so soon, so he made out a false return and brought poor Uncle Sam in debt to him! He next tried Mr. Green, at Port Carbon—he had broke the day before, and was going to advertise for the benefit of the Insolvent Act. He applied to Mr. Black at Tamaqua; he gave him a draft on the "Okfenoko Swamp Agricultural, Lumberman's Safety Fund Office of Discount and Deposit at Musquitoville, Arkansas Territory." He was obliged to take this or nothing, and got a friend to negotiate it through the Bank, it being at a discount of 75 per cent; indeed a wag did say he had to give a premium to have it taken off his hands; but that we doubt. After all his exertions he fell short some hundred dollars of the amount to be paid.

"What's to be done Mr. Knowall?" said Uncle Sam with a face as long as one of the Gothic windows in our Church. Amos hesitated a while, at length answered, "I think you must give due bills to the men; we can redeem them in a week or so."

"Due bills," said Uncle Sam, "why how can they get bread and meat with them?" "Oh," grinned Amos, "you are well known in the Borough—they will pass any where." "Well, but Mr. Knowall, this 75 per cent business I can't stand, what's to be done?" "Why," said Amos after another pause, "you must get all your coal paid for in Bank Bills or Specie, and pay all your men for a few weeks in due bills; by that means we will be able to weather the storm that Bank has been raising."

Uncle Sam looked incredulous, but followed his advice; he was employed for days in signing due bills, and gave Knowall a power of Attorney to sign for him. The forms were printed to save time, and at last a wag called them shin-plasters, because he said they were likely to have "a good deal of bone and no meat." At the end of a few weeks, a larger amount of these bills had been issued than Uncle Sam himself was aware of. Mr. Knowall had not been idle, and every time he wanted a fip's worth of cigars he would get one of Uncle Sam's due bills changed, and put the money in his own pocket!

This could not last forever—Uncle Sam was a man of the best intentions, but he brought distress on his tenants—they could not pay their rents, but gave their due bills—so that at last it was like two pugnacious gentlemen exchanging cards.

"You owe me nine dollars, sir," says Tom. "I know it," says Dick; "here's my due bill for ten, give me a dollar change in silver. I owe Uncle Sam that amount, for some letters he has paid postage on for me, and he won't take any thing else."

"Hav'n't got it," replies Tom, "but here's a one of the Borough of Air Bubble, just as good."

And away they walked both having their debts forgiven, as they forgave their debtors.

Now had any one told Uncle Sam that he was a Sub-treasurer man he would have knocked him down—he is a violent Porter man, but still thinks Van Buren's Sub-treasury Scheme very bad, very bad indeed. Poor deluded gentleman! he had his sub-treasurers on a small scale, who succeeded him so completely, that he has been compelled to suspend business. Some of his debts have been paid through the Bank, who took the notes given by his tenants for rents &c., and knowing them to be honest, though hard pressed, cashed them at a fair business discount.

His affairs have been placed in the hands of arbitrators, and they tell me that a decision will be made on the second Tuesday of next month, at which time it is greatly feared by Uncle Sam's remaining clerks, agents, &c., that the report will be unfavorable.

From the Express. POLITICAL LYRICS. To the Democratic Ex-governor, who beat Gregg, the federal candidate, upwards of twenty four thousand majority.

"Air"—John Anderson my Joe, John. John Andrew Shulze my Joe John You once was very dear To every honest democrat, Beloved both far and near. But now since you have honestly Come out for honest Joe, The locos curse you high and low John Andrew Shulze my Joe. There's Davy Lynch and all his crew With Treasury Subs and all Abusing you till all is blue, Because you give the ball That's rolling for old Ritner, With freemen's forceful blow, An honest push to victory John Andrew Shulze my Joe. And there's Billy Wilkins, Chief Marshal of the few That's marching through our streets to day, This will to you seem new. For Billy was a Federalist, As you and I well know, And not like you a democrat John Andrew Shulze my Joe.

John Andrew Shulze my Joe John You know this David Porter, Now tell us, should a democrat Become his blind supporter? Should we forget the perjury? The insolence? and cry For such a man in this free state, John Andrew Shulze my Joe. It has been said that Ritner, Was brought up in a bog, That he's a stupid Dutchman And worse; "damned Dutch hog." But you my John have told the truth: And come out for old Joe, The democratic candidate, John Andrew Shulze my Joe.

COLEMAN of Robinson, to Miss MARY HILL, formerly of Pottsville. On Thursday last, by the Rev. E. B. Evans, Mr. DAVID PRICE, to Miss MARGARET EVANS, all of Minersville.

The members of Pulaski Lodge, No. 216, and the Masonic fraternity generally, are respectfully invited to meet at the Odd Fellows Hall, in Port Carbon, at 11 o'clock, to attend the remains of their deceased brother.

Another Sub-treasury Scheme!—Abraham Jarvis, the Van Buren Postmaster at Hartsigrove, Ohio, has taken leg-bail and the responsibility of removing the people's deposits. He was a noisy loco loco, and the main pillar of the administration in his town. "He who runs may learn," says the proverb.

Connubial.—Mrs. Emma Willard, so celebrated as the head of the Troy Female Seminary, nuptialized with Dr. Yates of Albany. While she was teaching the young idea to shoot, it appears a young archer was shooting at her. She has made a great many good wives, and we hope she may make another.

Great Project.—A canal about a mile in length to join the head waters of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers will cause an uninterrupted navigation between the lakes and the river Mississippi. The work only requires one lock with a lift of seven feet.
