"You have been pleased to advert to my public services. I lay claim to no praise in regard to them services. I my chain to no praise in regard to them other than that of devoting all my time and energies to the discharge of the duties assigned me, and having been at all times and in every instance, guided in my conduct by a single desire to promote the common good, and the honor and prosperity of my native State. There has not been an executive term since the revolution, wherein so many embar rassing and perplexing questions arose as during that, which terminated in January last. But, my friends, through the mercy and guidance of an all wise God these were all met and disposed of in such a manner as enables me to look back upon that part of my life, with an unchanged confidence, that the future will do the past justice, and that my children and friends will not have cause to regret the existence of one line of the history of Pennsylvania, with which the name of their father or their friends, is

The events with which my life as chiet magistrate of the State are connected, are so recent, that it will not be expected that I should dwell upon them in ictail. And the administration of my successor is too new, to require at my hand an exposition of the principles and measures, upon which he commenced

My ardeat and sincere prayer for the State, is, that the present executive may have a more quiet term than mine; and that when retired from the difficult seat he occupies, the Commonwealth may be prosperous, and he feel the same peace of mind that now accompanies me to the plough.
