THE GLOBE PUBLISHING THE WAIS DOCTRINE.—Alarmed at the manifestation of popular disapprobation with which certain incendiary counsels of the Globe papers in New York have been received, the Editors of the Glasgow Standard have published a Whig principles, and exhorts and rebukes its mad followers in this wise:—

FROM THE GLOBE. No run on the Banks, and the last news from England.—We are mortified to see any portion of the press recommending a run on the Banks.

Any other course will, in the end, prove as ruinous to the community at large, and especially the laboring classes, as to the banks.

CAUTION, JUSTICE, STEADINESS, ECONOMY, AND REASONABLE CONFIDENCE, will carry all through the crisis, except the few, whose inordinate rashness in the pursuit of wealth always expose them to shipwreck in the lightest squall.

THE rate of interest has not been raised to six per cent, as was anticipated; the Bank of England had not been upon gold to pay the dividends, as some feared; the rate of exchange with the continent appeared improving; the English stock did not decline; the budget had been opened, and the revenue was improving instead of growing worse; and the prospect of the crops was good.

And the time was at hand. Yes, the time was coming when they would burst asunder the iron chains of despotism. America had given them an example of what could be effected by an undaunted resolution, and while the memory of their fathers' blood in their bosoms, the fires of patriotism, the language of their ancient republican virtues lived again in the heroic Washington, in the eloquent Henry, the boast and pride of our western world.

There was a young Greek who came in my company to Scio. During our voyage, he had forcibly struck my attention, whether from respect paid to him by those around, or from a certain dignity and grace of manner, I cannot tell.

A form more active, light and strong. Ne'er shot the ranks of war along.

I said to myself, this is indeed a hero, and one who might claim kindred with Alcibiades.

A lively voice and a merry laugh were heard from a group before us; the young Greek stepped eagerly forward, a glance of recognition was returned from some one of the party, and I saw a young girl exchange greetings with him, in a way that showed they had met before.

And in this Marco, she said—why, how you are changed! Is it possible you were once my playmate? How tall you have grown! When did you come from Peste? Do you like the Austrians? Surely not as well as your own folks.

How long Melissa might have continued her questions, I were impossible to tell; the young man answered by taking her hand in his, and whispering his reply into her ear, so that they were lost to us.

Marco was one who burned for the deliverance of his country; he had met with many Greeks abroad who were like himself, ardent in the cause of freedom. He was a member of that secret association entered into by the young Greeks, an association by which they were pledged to each other, and bound by the most dreadful oaths, that they would see their country free from Turkish despotism or rule.

parson with it, and she believed him. Guileless herself, passing all her days in retirement, she knew not of the duplicity of mankind, and her simplicity had thus made her the dupe of a remorseless and heartless villain.

All Ben Ali, for that was his name—had observed her hanging on the arm of the handsome Marco, had seen them in close conference together. Stung with jealousy and resentment, he vented his rage in secret curses, and following them at a short distance, he saw them enter the house of Melissa.

That evening she was to have met him in a grove of acacias, back of her father's grounds, at the hour of midnight. He went to the spot long before the time, and after waiting in an agony of impatience, as the last shadows of evening fell upon the scene, Melissa came. Veiling his anger under a smiling countenance, with the fond eagerness of a lover, he advanced towards her.

"Ah, cruel girl, dost thou know how long thou hast detained me from the lustre of thy countenance? Remove thy veil, dearest. Why should it hide these tears? Has any grief befallen thee? Has thy father discovered our attachment? or dost thou doubt me? Have I not promised to renounce all for thee? My country, my name, my religion?"

"Ah! it is for this I doubt thee, and fear me, that I utter to these so sacred ties, thou mayest prove so to me."

"Melissa, some one has poisoned thy mind against me; some one has promised more to thee than I. The accursed Greek has made thee treat me thus—I am no longer trusted, is it indeed so? Can Melissa doubt, after all that I have done, all that I have said? Yes, she does, I see it in her manner towards me. But ah, let him beware of me. The love of Ali is deep, but his revenge shall be terrible. I saw him with thee; but now—Marco Bozzaris—he crossed my path when a child, but he shall not now that I am a man!"

"Listen to me, Ali, this is not so—thy love, mistaking me, some one has promised more to thee than I. The accursed Greek has made thee treat me thus—I am no longer trusted, is it indeed so?
