Mr. Alexander K-, and his blooming bride who had just arrived from " foreign parts," took up their abode in one of the fashionable hotels in the - Queen City," and spent the first day or two amid the numerous band boxes, hat cases, trunks and other apparatus consequent upon travelling. Mrs. K ----, desirous of seeing town, begged her husband, one morning, to escort her on a stroll of discovery; and accordingly they issued forth, determined to astonish the natives by the splendor of their accourrements-in which, as will shortly appear, they were quite successful: Having satisfied their optics that the "village" was wonderfully civil zed for a savage country, they found their way to a pleasant promenade in the environs, whither the haut ton of the Cincinations were wont to resort ; but as ill luck would have it, the clouds became overcast, and the rain soon pattered down in abundance. No place of shelter being near, and Mrs. K --- intent on preberwing her silks undamaged, cast her eye around, and seeing only a few gentlemen and ladies be-'hind, immediately gathered up her outside garment and threw it over her bonnet-it being a common resource "at home." Scarcely had she walked a dezen steps beside her liege lord, when ill-suppressed titter assailed her eais; but knowing full well that her andress was white as the driven snow, she attributed their mirth to mauvais honte, and pluming her head aloft, stepped for ward with the air of an Elssler. The individuals behind, for reasons best known to themselves, could no longer contain their laughter, and in defiance of etiquette, burst out into a roar.

"Heavens, dear Alic!" whispered the lady. " is it at me the monsters are laughing?" "I don't know, my dear-walk on a little." was the reply. "O, no; let us go slowly, and allow them to

In vain they elacked their pace, the distance between them and their followers remained the same, and the mirth of those behind knew no bounds.

"Do step on, my dear," said Mr. K , not a little annoyed-when, O ye Kings of miracles! what a sight greeted his eyes! In flaming letters, he read on his canvass trunk cover, (which the lady had strung round her hips in the hurry of of Pottsville. starting, in the absence of a better bustle !) " Alexander K---, of -!!"

THEATRES.—We have no objection to the drama in its legitimate sphere: but the manner daughter of Jesse and Eliza Foster. in which our Theatres have been and are conducted is so entirely objectionable, in a moral point of view, that thousands who would think it not amiss to witness the performance of the legitimate drama, are of necessity compelled to stay away from them. But still there is a large class of play goers in our cities and towns. Would that they could be induced to spend their evenings in a more profitable and rational manner.-We know that it will be difficult to effect such a reformation; for there is something in the theat- POTTSVILLE ATHENIAN INSTITUTE.-A stated meeting of the Pottsville Athenian Institute will be held at the Town Hall on Tuesday evenany other by which we seek to pass away the

Yet, for all this, there are few of us who do not feel within ourselves that the theatre is not the school where proper notions of morality are likely to be acquired. It cannot be denied, that the neighborhoodof theatres is often the presentment-and not the counterfeit presentment, neither-of scenes of vice and dissipation which are but too often the inceptive means of leading the rising generation to ultimate ruin, by slow but certain degrees .-The dram of the drunkard is here often tasted for the first time; and the habits that conduct to destruction, here often first subjugate the mind to their sway. Nor is the theatre entirely free from the pestilential atmosphere which infects the vicinity of its location; We all know that many MILLER & HAGGERTY have on hand a of our stage representations are any thing rather than purifying in their, tendencies; and we all know that when the text of the author is free from objection, the officiousness of the player not unfrequently steps in, and blurs with obscene allusion, what was before unspotted with blemish. COAL MINES TO LET. HE Summit Coal Company have completed their Rail Road, erected screens, and opened mines ready for working to the extent of fifty thousand tons of coal per annum, capable of being wrought by uncovering entirely above water level, which they are prepared to lease on advantageous conditions, for a term of years. Three mines are in the immediate vicinity of the Beaver Meadow works, and the transportation is continuously decending to the Lehigh river.
The mining operations can be carried on with great economy, owing to the favorable position of the veins. Proposals may be left at the office, No. 57 South 3d street, Philadelphia, directed J. L. FENIMORE, directed to Sect'y of the Board of Directors.
