FOR THE MINERS' JOURNAL. The Past, the Present, and the Future. I mused upon the mighty PART :

A voice came from the dead; "Be firm and faithful to the last," In solemn tones it said. "So thou a rich reward shall win, For all thy toil and strife,

Peace and delight where pain has been; In death a new born life." I knclt me at the FUTURE's throne,-The throne of mystic light,

Where millions there allegiance own And bow them to her might. I prayed her that she would disclose

Of Summer's gentle rain. Had listened to the leaflet's tune. When by the breezes stirred; And from the flowers of blushing June,

Sweet melodies had heard. Had heard the brooklet in its glee Tinkle its tiny bell,

And clop its hands right merrily, As duncing through the dell.

Ard thus I knew that unseen hand That sang the FUTURE's hymn,-Those dwellers in the unknown land Of INDISTINCT and DIM.

They were the human souls, to whom Form had not yet been given ; Destined to Life, Death and the Tomb, To win or forfeit Heaven.

"Mourn not," they sang "the shadowy Past It liveth not for thee, Nor to the FUTURE, dim and vast.

Look not too anxiously. "But with the active PRESENT live,
