Mr. R. said, although he had been amused, as every one here must have been, at the developments that had taken place during this debate, yet he could not reflect on it seriously without feeling the most intense pain and humiliation. The sentiments which were uttered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Cushing) fell on his heart. They were the impulses with which sel car as the foreboding of the evils that were fast clustering around the destinies of his country. When he had reflected on the probable fate which ultimately awaited our nation, he had supposed that our Government, like all those that had prereded it, would, in obedience to that principle of change and revolution with which the decree of fate seemed to have stamped all buman institutions have its day of degeneracy, decline, and rum. But he had consoled himself with the hope that this period was in the far, far distant future, and that it would not come till they and their children and children's children had passed away and been forgotten. But the declarations of the gentleman From Massachusetts, had aroused him to the conviction of the corrupted and witiated state of the public mind. And could it be-must history record it-that in the very infancy of our Republic in the fifty fourth year of our existance, one who was recognized as possessing the especial confidence of the Executive boldly and recklessly had came into this Hall, and here, is the face of the assembled Representatives of the Nation, declared that the power and patronage of this Government would be wielded for the benefit of them who would sustain those in power ?

The open avowal of such sentiments afforded alarming proof of the corruptions of the times-of the degeneracy of this age. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr, Adams) had compared it to the sale of the empire by the Pimtorian bands of Rome. It was worse than that It was in the streets of Rome, and not in the Senate House, that the Prætorian cohorts sold the imperial purple to him who would bid highest for its honors. And whilst mercenary swords were cothing with power the leaders of faction in the dield of Mars, the flame of liberty still continued to burn in the councils of the Senate House. It was there that the principles of freedom had been most devoutly cherished-It was there that they last expired. It was there that the precepts of Fabius and Cincinnatus, and Caro and the Scipios were last quoted with reverence. It was there that their virtuous and heroic actions were last forgotten. But here in our Government and in its infancy too -it was in the Representative Hall of the nation that Executive power and patronage, and Executive influence in the appointment of a successor, were offered as the reward of party silegiance. And that to come from Massachusetts too! From the land of the Pilgrim Fathers-from the classic soil of Lexington and Bunker Hill!the first to resist tyranny. And must she hear the repreach of being the first to offer to barter away the rights for which she so gloriously suffered and bled ?

These sentiments of the gentleman from Mas sachusetts are only the echo of what was heard e few months since in Fanueil Hall by one whom that patriotic State so long looked on and cherished with pride and glory. How times must have changed—how the public mind must have degenerated! That one, whose fame and char acter belonged to the nation, should have uttered the detestable doctrine that the fact of there being many Whigs yet retained in office should be a reason why that party should not denounce what they in their hearts believe to be the corruptions of this Administration. That the consideration of place should hush them in selence when they see public virtue scouted and popular rights trampled into dust! And that, too, in walls consecrated to freedom-where the spirit-stirring tones of resistance to tyranny have so often aroused the free and the brave. Would to God these sentiments could have originated with some one else than Daniel Webster.

Time once was when every patriotic American felt proud that Daniel Webster was his countryman. His gigantic, and commanding talents had endeared him to every lover of his country's Oats, glory; his noble efforts in many a trying contest had equally endeared him to every lover of constitutional freedom. What must have been the feelings of his friends—those frends who have cherished sustained, and cheered him on in so many conflicts—when on an occasion they sought to do him honor, instead of reviving their drooping spirits, and advising and encouraging them in the approaching struggle, he met them with reproaches, revilings, and bitter taunts. Sir, (said Mr. R.) he is gone—and let him go! He not only abandoned us in the hour of triumph, but he was now doing service in the ranks of those who had so often felt the force of his might yarm. He might now, perhaps, console himself with the idea, that although he cannot save himself, yet, like Samson, he can bury beneath the ruins of our political edifice the object of his hatred. Still, if he possesses the common sympathies and feelings of our nature, the day of remores must come, Like Themistocles, who tarnished the escutcheon of his fame by negotiating with his former enemies, he might perhaps receive his reward in some paltry office under his hew allies; yet his declining years must be enablitered with the recollection of the bright hopes he has withered, the afflicting evils he has brought upon his country.

What must be his reflections on contemplating the character and progress of this debate? His that have been uttered against him. So far as the Whig party in this House was concerned, the gentleman had begged the question. He denied that he had been denounced and anothematized here. He called upon every one within the sound of his voice to say if Mr. Webster had not been treated with the greates forbearance and moderation. It was with pain and regret that his present position was alluded to here by the Whigs. It had until lately been in the language of apology for his course, and of hope that he would yet restore himself to the confidence of long tried and faithful friends, that his conduct has been spoken of by the Whigs in that House. It was from the other party-from those in whose cause he was now abiding that he hadirectived denuncia tion most heavy. But if he has been denounced by the Whigs, would not his denunciation be prima facia evidence that he deserved it ? What interest could the Whig party have in demouncing 200 New Cobo's Spelling Books such a man? Would it not rather be their in-such a man? Would it not rather be their in-such a man? Would it not rather be their in-such a man. Would it not rather be their in-such a man. Would it not rather be the man. Would it not r terest to preserve so strong an ally-to possess the aid and influence of his mighty mind ! And after adhering to him so long, through so many eventful struggles, was it fair, was it reasonable, to suppose that his former Whig friends there should denounce him without sufficient cause? To suppose so was to reason against all the natural springs and impule sa of human action. As to the "scorn and contempt" of which the gentleman from Kentucky spoke, that was too of his logical mind. Suppose they had indulged in complaint

"Scorn and contempt" were the cheapest of all mental impulses; they afforded evidence meither of intellect of the head, nor feeling of the fishness always regarded honest and unfortunate suffering; with which heartless tyranny always looked on the complaints of the oppressed. The unfeeling miser felt "scorn and contempt" for the cries of suffering poverty; the cruel despot felt "scorn and contempt" for the complaints of injured innocence. MITCHELL'S NATIONAL MAP OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC, OR United States of North America, Together with Maps of Thirty Iwo of the prin-

THE toregoing is the title of a new Map of the United States, recently published by the subscriber, which, for accuracy of Geographical detail, boldness and distinctness of Engraving. beauty of Paper and Printing, and richness of Colouring, will challange competition with any similar production.
Surrounding the General Map, are Maps of Thirty-two of the principal Cities and Towns, with their V.cinities; and in the margin there is. a Table of all the Counties, in the United States.

according to the Cenaus of 1840. The population of a feet in length, and 31 in beight. It is mounted on Muslin, in the beat manner with a next Police and Market. It is mounted on Muslin, in the best manner with a neat Roller and Moulding.

This National Map of the United States is sold meanably for the exceedingly small sum of Two Dollars, less than one-half the price hitherto charged for maps of the like size—forming, without question, the chespest work of the kind ever published in the United States, or in the World and coming within the means of almost every one, however limited his circumstances. The subscriber has employed in the Compiletion and Engraving of this Map, the best Artists in their respective departments, in the country, and he is pursuaded that all who may examine it, will be satisfied that the distinctness of its Lettering, and the facility with which every Name in it may be read, are an essential improve-ment, in these important respects, on the Maus usually published.

(nearly 1300 in number,) with their population

The importance of an intimate acquaintance with, and a correct anowledge of the Geograph, of our country, must be evident to every one. The vast extent of its territory, with its happily arranged Divisions—its mighty-Rivers, constructing by their countless tributaries at the remains that districts—its upparalleles when or Lakes the extensive Mountain Ranges, and its long of Sea-Count, can be a counted a procedure by a reference to an assurate and distinctly.
