A silent, hidden thing; Where hopes and fears alternaterise. Like shadows o'er a spring, That in some lone and silent wood Is gushing in the solitude.

The half a woman's heart can feel! An old Friend with a new Face. I had heard, previous to my release at Santiago, that two of my former Puebla, on the road leading from the city of Mexico to Vera Cruz; but little did I expect to see either of them in the former place. Their names were Major George T. Howard and Capt. Rankin Hudson. While walking along the Pilateres, one of the principle thoroughfares of Mexico, I saw approaching me, on the opposite side of the street, a man whose gait at least was familiar. He was dressed partly in the Mexican and portly in the English fashion-about half and half-and a fair and full face was partially concealed by hair of more than Mexican blackhess and straightness. While earnestly surveying him across the street, for I felt fully convinced that I had before seen the figure, the stranger bowed and smiled. Through all the disguise I at once detected the face of Major Howard, and crossed over to bid him exelcome to Mexico and freedom. The first greetings over, I had time to examine more closely my old campanion in imprisonment. His light and carling hair, which had been suffered to grow long, was now dyed of a more than raven blackness, and by means of pomatum had been made to lay as straight as an Indian's. Long confinement, too, in the hospital at Puebla, had bleached his face to a very fair and delicate hue, rendered doubly strange by being contrasted with the exceeding blackness of his hair. Disguised as he was, however, he could easily be detected by his size and walk, and I remonstrated with him upon his temerity in thus exposing himself openly, when a heavy reward was offered for his head. He said that he intended to brave it out-that he would not expose any of his friends by taking shelter at their houses, but had gone to a public Mexican fonde or hotel, much frequented by Mexican officers, where he dired at the same tuble with them. He considered this course a better one than skulking about, and perhaps be was right; for the exceeding impudence of the thing completely threw them off their guard. He invited me to call at his longings; but resolved not to expose him thus far, for I had been told that

I refused his invitation. A small party of Americans, myself among the number, visited the Italian Opera House that evening. The avorite Castellan, now creating such a sensation in our mus cal c reles, was p'aying what it has done. Rebecca, in Nicoli's opera of "The Templars." Between two of the acts we adjourned to a coffee and chocolate room attached to the theatre, when who should we fin I there, in close conversation with a Mexican, officer, but Major Howard. I could not but think him imprudent in thus exposing himself, and expressed my thoughts; but he had come to Mexico "to see the sight;" and felt determined to grantly himself. I afterwards saw him inside the theatre, quietly smoking a puro, and | could be found to arrest its progress. She bev. much erat

But Capt. Hudson "exposed himself still more. He even went so far as to cut his name in the cupola of one of the most public churches of the -city, and at a time when the place was much. crowded. It was not his initials nor his name alone which he cut, but " Capt. Rankin Hu Ison, Texan Santa Fe Volunteer," may now be seen as he left it, cut deep in the wood, and among a multiplicity of other names. Both of them finally errived in this country in safety, but no escaped prisoners ever ran greater risks .- N. O. Picayune.

Coustains -A country gentleman lately at rived at Boston, and immediately repaired to the house of a relative, a lady who had married a merchant of that city. The parties were glad to see him, and invited him to make their house his home (as he declared his intention of remaining in the city but a day or two). The husband of the lady, anxious to show, attention to a relative and friend of his wife, took the gentleman's horse to a livery stable in Hanover street. Finally, his visit became a vis tation, and the merchant, after an elapse of eleven days, found beside lodging and boarding the gentleman, a pretty considerable bill had run up at the livery etable. Accordingly, he went to the man who kept the stable, and told him when the gentleman took the horse he would pay the bill

" Very good," said the stable keeper; "I un derstand you." Accordingly, in a short time the country gentleman went to the stable and ordered country gentleman went to the stable and ordered coive a communication from any one that has his horse to be got ready.
