As I am at leisure this morning, I might as well make a beginning, and prepare your mouth for taking a cast,' Cuspidati said, aner thinking a mo-

Hardphy was willing, and so the dentist began by reintwing six storips, fill well imbedded in the gums, and six teeth; the erowns of two of which were so much decayed that they crushed beneath the forceps like bits of chins ware. This part of the operation wis long and severe, and prosecuted on the part of the dentist with much more vigour, so the patient thought, than tonderness. At last, however, with his head aching as if it would burst, Hardpsy arose from the ciff ting chair with every member, good, bad, and infifferent, removed from

·You will have to wait about two weeks for our guins to heal, so assto be in a state to sumit of my taking a cast, "Quspidati said. "Come on this day, and at this shour, two weeks hence, and we will proceed with the operation. Of course there will be no more pain."

Hardpay ti en retired his head feeling as large as a bushel basket. When the period arrived for esuming operations, he repaired again to the dentist's, and had a cast, in wax, taken of that portion of his mouth to be fitte with a new set of grinlers.

How soon will they barcady ?' he next as ked. I find this gumming is not what it is cracked up o be.*

It will take some days to get them up. Let me see. 1 think I shall be ready for you in about a week.'

In a week Hardpay presented himself, ploased is a child, at the idea of his new set of teeth. .Well, sir ! Are yog ready ?' was his eager nuestion. All ready ;' gravely replied Cuspidati. That's clover ! That's clever !' And the patient rubbed his hends put of his hat, and threw his mantle over the back of a chair. Let me look at them."

The dentist took from his case a beautiful half. set of teeth, white and regular, and firmly fixed upon a strong plate of gold.

B-autiful !--beautifui !' ejaculated Hardpay. I could almost submit 30 just such another ordeal for the sake of having the fellows to them gracing my under jaw, instead of these confounded yellow. aching strugglers; that make me ashamed to open my mouth. Are you ready to insert them ?" Not quite,' replied Euspidati, still with a grave ountenance. There is a little preliminary matter to be settled first."

And what is that ? asked the patient, with a slightly disappointed air.

This bill, sir,' presenting at the same time his bill for one hundred and twenty-five dollars. Do vou mean tofinsult me, eir ?' ejaculate Hardpay, drawing himself up, and looking terribly offended. 'O no.' the dentist replied, quietly 'Only, as by our own confession, wou are apt to forget those things, and as I have too much on hand to permit my giving attention to such matters, I thought it t for you to just make all square, as you went along, hid then the whole thing would be atled. But it is a downright insult; sir, to treat a gentleman in this way I It is an outrage, sir, and I will not submit to ita" "O no, not by any means,' returned Cuspidat, in the mildest tones, imaginable. I had not the east intention of insolting you. It is a mere mater of business, --- nything more. You asked me to put you up a set of teeth. I didn't consider that an insult, but proceeded at once to do myou wished. And now, I ask you for the pay, and you think I mean to insult you. Not at all, air ! -not at all. It is a mere business operation beween man and man." Hardpay then changed his tone, and proceeded to remonstrate with the dentist, but to no purpose, Cuspillati was not to be moved from his position; and, finally, the panent was compelled to depart under the almost honeless idea of endesvoring to raise one hundred; and twenty-five dollars,-for raise it he must. His tecth were gone, and there was no revenge to be had by throwing the set upon the dentist's hands. After about a weck he again presented himself at the rooms of the ifestist, but with a frowbing brow. Cuspidati, however, received him blandly, took his money, and receipted the bill in the most quiet, matter of fact way imaginable. Then Hardjiny scaled himself sullenly in the great operating chair, and the beautiful set of teeth were produced, and fitted skilfully into their destined places. All right,' said the dentist, after the patient had moved his jaws in a required direction. They will feel a little uppleasant in your month at first, but that will soon wear off." Good morning, sir,' returned the crestfallen patient, bowing law, and formally, with a face of nortification and anger, turning away as he spoke, and leaving Doctor Cuspidati alone in his glory. The biter was bitten that time,' quictly remark. ed the latter, as he proceeded to lock op the bills paid over with so much_reluciance. OLD, BUT WELL TOLD ; SAVING POSTAGE Hillo!
