was a circumstance so unusual, that his wife could not help feeling a degree of uncasiness. She went to the door and listened for him. after the clock struck cleven, and stood there for some time, expecting every moment to hear the sound of his in the distance. But she waited in vain, and at last re-entered the house with a troubled feeling. At last the clock struck twelve, and almost at the same time she heard her husband at the door, endeavoring to open it with a dead-latch key. In this he was not isucessful from some cause, and thinking that she might have turned the key, Mrs. Peters went quietly and opened the door for him. She found that she had not locked it.

As she lifted the latch, the door was suddenly against her, and her husband came staggering in. As he passed her, he struck against the wall of the passage-rebounded-struck the other side, and then fell heavily upon the floor. The dreadful truth instantly flashed upon her. He was drunk. for her!' said Mrs. Grimes, with feeling; 'I wonder how she stands it. If my husband were to act so, cussion. it would kill me. 'I would never stand it in the world,' edded

Mrs. Pitts. It is a dreadful situation for a wo-man to be placed in. Mr. Larkin used to be one of the best of mon, and took the best possible care of his family. For years there was not a happier woman in town than his wife, but now it makes ones heart acke to look at her. Oh! it must be one of the most heart rending things in the world to have a drunken husband, Well, all I've got to say, spoke up Mrs, Peters, with warinth, is, that I don't pity her much. Why, Mrs. Peters Haw can you talk so? Well, I don't. Any woman who will live with a drunken husband don't deserve pity.) Why don't she leave him?' 'That is easier said than done, Mrs. Peters.'

I should think, it a great deal easier to leave, lent man-and a sober man withal. And his wife was tenderly attached to him. In regard to his ever becoming a drupkard she had as little fear as of his running off and leaving. Still, when she made the last remark, she looked towards him (for he was present,) with a stern and significant expression of her countenance. This was not really meant for him, but for the imaginary individual she had supposed as bearing the relation towards her of a drunken husband.

The officer tound, on inquiry, that is the relation tow-obviate all Constitutional scruples and practical the officer tound, on inquiry, that is the market of the prisoners, a soldier distinguished rds her of a drunken husband. ously, retorted Mrs. Peters .You don't know what you are talking about,' spoke Mrs. Grünes. Hindeed then, I do! I consider any woman a fool who will live with a drunken husband. For my part I have not a spark of sympathy for the Custom House books show that there arrived at wives of drunkards I men those who lipe with this City in the two weeks ending with last Fri-them who begger and abuse them. 'You were never placed in such a situation, and therefore are not competent to decide how far a woman who continues to live with a drunken husband is or is not to blame |For my part, I ani inclined to think that, in most cases, to live with a husband under these circumstances, is least of two

This was said by Mrs. Pitts. I think you are right there,' resumed Mr. Feters. Trade. The only man. She knows all his good qualities, and remembers how tenderly he has loved her, and how he would still love her but for the mad infatuation from which he feels it impossible to break away .-The hope that he will reform never leaves her .---When she locks at her children, even though abustd and neglected, she cannot but hope for their father. And this hore keeps her up! 'Any woman is a lool to feed herself up with' such fancies. There is only one true remedy and that is separation. That's what I'll do, and every woman of sense ought to do. Don't tell me about hope of reforming. It's all nonsense. You wouldn't catch me breaking my heart after that fashion, for any man. Not I,' said Mrs. Peters: The more Mrs. Grimes and Mrs. Pitts, and oth-ers present argued their side of the question, the more pertinaciously did she maintain the position she had assumed, until Mr. Peters could not help feeling somewhat vexed and some little hurt. He being her husband, and the only one who could possibly hold the relation towards whom all her indignation was directed under the imaginable possibility of his becoming a tipler. After awhile the subject was dropped, and at the close of the evening, the friends separated and went to their homes. It was, perhaps, two months from the period at which this conversation occurred, that Mr. Peters left his home early in the evening to attend a po-litical meeting politics at that time running high, and hard cider flowing as freely as water. He was in the habit of attending such meetings, and a sent his notice to marry after. Betty replied,
