THE DUTY OF EVERY CITIZEN. We not long since had occasion to converse with a religious friend upon the political duties required of every citizen, and among other things we gave it as our opinion that every individual, especially the religious part of the community, should feel it to be his duty to vote, assigning as a reason that upon the welfare and prosperity of our political institutions depended the success of our religion.

Short Patent Sermon. I shall preach a short sermon from a long text. These are the words: Attend to your business; Be punctual in your promises; Consider well before you promise; Dare to do right; Envy no man; Faithfully perform your duty; Do not in the least offend a brother; Have respect for your character; Infringe on no one's rights; Treat every man with kindness. Yes, treat your brother mortals with kindness, but never with a gin cocktail.

Zealously persevere in the right path. Among the multitude of paths that intersect each other in this mysterious world, it is difficult to determine which is the right one. Nevertheless, follow the one pointed out by the guide-book of religion and morality, and you will pretty surely bring up at the gate of heaven.

Progress of Improvement. -Types. A correspondence who has been engaged for many years in the manufacture of printing types, has furnished us with some statistics in relation to that business, which are not only interesting in themselves, but which furnish an impression upon the mind the magnitude and extent of past improvements in the art.

ANECDOTE OF HENRY CLAY.

The writer of this, who in 1806 was an apprentice to the bricklaying business, was engaged in building Mr. Clay's house at Ashland; and while so employed, in those days, were, by the wealthy and purse proud, treated little better than negroes - I shall never forget the respectful and kind treatment toward his women; whom he seemed to consider as equals, and as well as his own family.

I remember that one day, a revolutionary soldier, who was a stranger to me, had got drunk, and fell down before Mr. Clay's house, where he lay for a perfectly senseless state, like a brute; and as there was a storm coming up, some one mentioned the fact to Mr. Clay. He immediately went into the old man, and with his own hands dragged him into his house - and with his own hands washed and cleaned up, and put to bed. The next morning, during breakfast, Mr. Clay addressed the old man in the most affectionate and touching manner, telling him that such was the reverence he felt for all those who had fought for our liberties, that he could not bear to see them taken to respect by getting drunk - that he could not but feel an everlasting gratitude toward him, and all others, who had purchased, at so dear a rate, the liberties which we all enjoy; that he would not object to an old soldier's taking an occasional dram; but he begged him, for his own sake, and for the sake of all those who had won our liberties, never to get drunk again. He then gave the old man some money, and sent him home to his friends.

Mr. Clay's sympathy and kindness for the errors of his old revolutionary soldier will never be forgotten by an old PATRIOT.

A Maiden Speech. -The "Gazette" in New York held a meeting at Military Hall, on Wednesday evening, on which one Mr. Harper, the newly elected Mayor, was present and made a speech. The New York Republic gives the following report of the proceedings, including Mr. Harper's remarks, which will be found worth reading for its quaintness: -A committee was appointed to introduce the Mayor and Common Council to the Hall, and the meeting being informed that they were at the door, a passage was formed in the crowd, leading to the platform. The band struck up "Hail to the Chief," every head was uncovered, and amid the most voracious enthusiasm, the Mayor, clerk, and the Aldermen and Assistants, bent in arm, were ushered upon the platform.

When the applause had subsided, the Mayor elected mounted the table, and was loudly cheered. He acknowledged the honor by a few words, and then made the following short and humorous address, which is the maiden speech of his Honor: -"Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen, I am here among you as a working-man. (Cheers) I never in the course of my life expected to be in the position I now stand before you. You have heard the argument, and you have rendered your verdict. We are your servants, and the servants of the people. (Cheers) Turning to the Aldermen and the Gentlemen on the platform, Mr. H. said, in a stage whisper, "That's fair rate." This caused a tremendous burst of laughter and repeated cheers. I am here to recognize you as working-men, and if I may be allowed to address you as a man did at a meeting in Boston - you will say that there is such a place as Boston - (A voice, "Yes down East.") "Rears of laughter." Yes, that's it exactly - down East. "Well, he was there, in a position a little different from ours - trying to talk himself into an office. (Laughter) He was a candidate for office and was calling on the people to elect him. His speeches began to fall, his language was loose, and his ideas were lame. The audience saw he was embarrassed, and a small chap, about the size of that yonder, (points to a young lad who was endeavoring to hold himself up by the gas-burner) cried out, "If you mister you're stuck!" (Tremendous cheers and shouts, which continued for several minutes, amid which Mr. Harper jumped off the table, observing, "And so on!")

Temperance and Kissing. -From one of William's recent letters to the National Intelligencer we extract the following: -It is an overlooked feather in the cap of temperance, that we owe it to the present invention of kissing. In the course of my reading I have fallen in with the historical fact that when wine was prohibited by law to the women of ancient Rome, male relatives had the right of ascertaining whether the forbidden liquor had been used, by tasting the lips of their sisters and cousins which the forbidden liquor had passed in.

Whig Delegates Wanted for the Baltimore Convention. -All the elephants, giraffes, lions, tigers, zebras, crocodiles, camels, boars, a variety of capes, unicorns, chameleons, &c., &c., lions, bears, orang outangs, trantulls, horned frogs, shals, anandans, sharks, whales, porpoises, &c., are invited to attend as delegates at large to the great Whig National Convention, to be held at Baltimore, in May next, where ample accommodation will be provided for them at the expense of the "Clay Executive Committee."

Protective Tariff or British Free Trade. -The Electors of the United States are called upon to decide, by their Presidential suffrages, a question of considerable importance. It is whether our Manufactories and Work-shops, shall be located in England or in America. Mr. Van Buren thinks that we ought to hire England to do our work, and pay her in Money instead of Produce. Mr. Clay thinks that as John Bull refuses to "exchange wares with us," by taking our Produce for his Manufactures, we ought to do our own manufacturing. It is a plain, simple proposition, and one that the People are to decide. -All. Journal.
