THE COAL TRADE.

The great drought which continues to prevail in this region, drying up nearly all the streams and some of the springs, continues to effect the trade on the Canal. The Boats are compelled to take light loads, to prevent their sticking fast—and even this precaution failed in a number of instances. The shipments have consequently occlined about 1000 tons, by this avenue, and have increased only about 100 tons, by Rail Road.
