Where it I go my soul is blest;
whe meets me there, a cheering light;
Anti when I sink away to rest
She nurmurs near—good night; good night; Our earthly forms are far apart; But can here trit be so night.
Nor I a home within her heart?
And love but dream her fond reply?

Oh, no! the form that I behold -No shaping this of memory ! I saw her once ; and still I see.

TO FARMERS DAUGHTERS.

It has been some time since I talked to the girls This evening I will give them a few lines, letting them know I think of them yet. As usual, I am dwelling on the common, every day affairs of life and feeling more the importance of young females being well acquainted with all the minutia thereof. The reason for my writing as I do at present, I will give you.

A few days since, I heard a gentleman, who wished a domestic, industrious, and contented wife, epeaking of a pretty, interesting girl, praising her modest deportment and engaging manners, but at last wound up with, She does not know how to do enything useful; she could not make her own dresses: she would be of very little use in this world of hard work. Now, I had nearly the saint opinion myself, though I would not tell him, you know; but I though I would tell you, and after you profit by it, if you choose. He spoke also of some young ladies who studied mental and morown dresses : she would be of very little use in of some young ladies who studied mental and mor- hold their general election, at the al philosophy, chemistry and other branches, and wanted to know what use it would finally be .--He was certain trom his own observation, they did not have enough of philosophy to govern their tempers and general conduct; and as to chemistry, all their study had not given them a knowledge of bread-baking, which he considered a very important item, his mother having been successful in that line of business, and he had been accustomed to the best sort of bread. He thought if their studies were not of some practical utility, they might as well be let alone.

If was really amused to hear views so much in opposition to the prevailing notions of the day;—and, to tell the truth I thought there was some good common sense in them, though I informed him tho girls would laugh most heartily at such monsensical stuff, in these days of improvement, when many consider it polito and sensible to be He was certain from his own observation, they when many consider it polite and sensible to be perfectly ignorant of common affairs. My advice was, that he should go away out in the country, and look for the daughter of some good farmer, who had taught his family it is honorable to engage in all the useful employments in which the greater part of the duty of woman consists-one who could sit down happily at home, and study Bousehold goods, without sighing for the excite ment of fine dress, fashionable furniture, fashion able visiting, and all those fashionable things that disturb the peace of young house-keepers, and render home a scene of misery and strife, instead of the gathering place of the heart's best affections-If girls had any idea of what would promote their precious time would be spent in the acquisition of useful and necessary knowledge, rather than frittering it away to gain a few (generally useless) accomplishments. The first is of great importance, in every situation in life: the latter are almost always given up, as soon as their possessor takes the station at the head of a family. I was led to consider what should be the character of a lady who has finished her education, or who at least thad left school, and also of the training necessary -to form that character. Nothing preventing, I will tell you my cogitations at some future time although some of you will think I am altogether too old-fashioned to be writing in these days of light and knowledge,-Tennessee Agriculturist.

Opinion.-Strange, that one whose opinion we meither respect nor admit, should yet have pow. er to wound !- not stranger, though than that it should have power to please. One may live to be indifferent to every thing but opinion. We may reject friendship which has often deceived us; renounce love, whose belief once found false, leaves us atheists of the heart : we may turn from pleasures which have palled-from employments which have become wearisome; but the opinion of our kind, whether for good or for evil, still retains its hold; that once broken, every social and moral tis is broken too-the prisoner then may go to his solitary cell-the anchorite to his hermitage-the ast link with life and society is rent in twain.

Another accident at a Pole raining. A Ger. sman tailor, named John Baptiste Hoffman, was killed at Cincinnati last week by the falling of a .hickory pole, which some of the adherents of the Democratic party were raising.
