" Ah ! could the storms which rage in the human bosom be as easily dispelled ; could the dark passions which devastate the heart of man thus retreat before the sunshine of peace, this world would not be the scene of misery it now is. The fair gardens which decorate the face of our mother earth may for awhile be shorn of their cauty by the raising of the pitileas storm; but they will bloom again, and with renovated vigor and added beauty when the refreshing alternations of dew and sanshine restore them to life .---Alas! is it thus with that source and spring of evil, the human ficant ! Can peace again take up its abode there when once it has been so rudely thrust out by those monopolising guests which rage with more wildness than any outward storm

The following sapital story is from a letter of Western correspondent in a late number of the Spirit of the Times; One evening towas rallying my companion upon his low spirits, and attributing it to long ab ence from his accence from his wife, making as infavorable a comparison as possible between his situation and my own, a bachelor, when our quondam friend, agusual, joined us. Matrimony, said he, is a fine thing when you're once in for it, and know what you've got; but its rather ticklish to begin mi, -you're as likely to make a fancy trade as any, and if I'm a goin' to make one, I want it in horses; for if I'm married, I shall have to stand perhaps, when I don't want

"Yes ; but,' said I, "what do you call a fancy trade ?' Why, captain, fancy trade is where a man's fancy out-ginerally his judgment; and runs away with his brains, 411 tell you a story, now, where my fancy run right away with my gumption, to the tune of a hundred :

The last time I was, up West, I went with the old brown hose Thad of the stage agint, a pretty good one, but a lectle tusty at times. Well, I got to Windam Gattle Show before I see a chance to swap; and for the matter of that, I could'nt sce any chance; There was a good many niceish. kind of horses, had nobody seemed to hanker after a trade. Finally, I see a countryman leading a black colt-wasn't he a buster !' He had the greatest wither you ever seen on a hoss, and a. set of limbs that would bring tears into a man's. eyes. I at's the chap.

"Mister,' says, I, " that's a first rate colt, if 'twant for them Sre !' . Them are what !' says. he. "Law, now to be green,' says I. Green," says he, 'I don't know what you mean." 'Wby,- there, man,' says ; . that'll do with some, but I've been there and staid a week.' Why, friend,' says he gif there's anything out of the way with my hiss, let's know it.' Why, do-you mean to say that you don't know that colt's got two bone apavins ?' I deny it,' says he = and his eyes stuck out so you could a hung your hat on 'em. hung over the city, so fcarful was the strife, so endless the war of the angly clements. The deluged streets were perfectly deserted; apparently, no human being dared to venture forth. The hour of midnight had slready sounded from the different clocks in the town, and all animate nature seemed awed into silence; when suddenly by the occasional flashes, a carriage was seen to dash through the streets with a rapidity scarcely equalled by the lightning itself; it might have been the chariot of some Spirit of the Tempest situated house, when a tall figure, closely wrapped Health and Life Pr in a cloak, sprang from the box where, apparently regardless of all-risk, he had sat enacting the part of coachman ; and pulling the bell with a violence which threatened its destruction, he at length succeeded in Yousing one of the inmates of the dwelling. So strangely timed a visit probably excited the apprehension of the individual thus imperatively summoned ; for instead of opening the door, a female was heard to demand from a window above, the name and purpose of the impatient visitor. In the name of all that is good, for the love of heaven, and the fear of hell, come down instantly, and do not stop to ask any more questions, or you may have the fe of a fellow creature to answer for!' was the hurried reply. The woman seemed less surprised than might have been expected from the impetuous manner she may be dead in five minutes, if she is stilled of the strange visiter. She was evidently accus. tomed to witness the agitated and anxious sympathy they generally betray who watch the agonizing throes of her whose appointed task it is, through groans and suffering, to bring into the world an accountable being. It was her business to usher into life these little heirs of immortality ; and 'she knew that the joys of parents are often purchased the fainting form to animation, returning to the by some hours of anxiety to the one, and no slight occupation which seemed to have shared his atmeed of previous bodily sufferings to the other; tention with the business of keeping a watchful she therefore did not much wonder at the excited manner of the individual who had called upon her at such an unseasonable hour; but supposing it might be some case of peculiar urgency, for which he thus burried her to the exertion of her skill, she hastily provided herself, as she best could, with protection against the storm, which still raged with thus showing that in the place where they are manufac-tured they have a reputation, greater than any other pills—which arises from the fact that Dn. up stairs, when he seized her with a grasp that say all resistance at defiance, and proceeded to band dage her eyes with his handkerchief. As was to be expected, she struggled violently, and reiterated the question as to who he was, and what was his plea for such unwarrantable usage. He replied by drawing from his cloak a pistol, which instantly silenced the frightened woman. Be still, he said, 'and I pledge you my hono

It is for the good of others, and not for any harm to yourself, that I call upon you to submit to all that I shall see fit to do. ' You are wanted for one to whom your assistance is imperiously necessary, and you must accompany me, and do your duty without enquiry and without remonstrance. I repeat, any struggle for assistance or escape will be fatal to you. I never threaten twice. All this was said rapidly, and although with dreadful energy and emphasis, in a suppressed tone of roice, the mysterious stranger having clos. ed the street door as soon as, the female admitted him. Hy now, sgain opened it, and beckoned the Woman!' exclaimed the man, in a tone of suppressed rage, 'didd not command you?' "Brute!' retorted she, would you destroy two at once!—would you murder both mother and child? See, her strength has failed; her pulse is gone :

by this horrid mask.' •Dead!' muttered he man, in a low, deep voice of uncontrollable anguish; 'dead! oh, no! any thing but that."

The woman was too much engrossed by her nedful care of the patient, to beed his words; and impurceiving that she had succeeded in restoring eye upon the proceedings of the woman, viz: that of heaping log after log upon an already blazing fire in an adjoining room. This seemed the more extraordinary as the Spring was far advanced, and the tightly closed doors and windows rendered the atmosphere of the room more than sufficiently warm without such unseasonable aid. The door between the two rooms opened just opposite the

At length the struggle ceased, and the voice of a living child greeted the newly-made mother's ear; but no muttered sound of thanksgiving breathed in joyful contrast to the feeble wail of the infant; no beloved voice bade her 'remember no more her anguish, for joy that a man was born into the world.' The strange being did indeed spring forward as the woman announced to him (hoping thereby perhaps to soften the asperity of his apparently demoniacal temperament) that a nuble boy, straight in limb and perfect in proportion, lived to bless his parents; but it was not to bestow a father's blessing on his first born ; it was not to imprint a father's kiss upon the miniature features; no, it was not the warm pressure of paternal affection; but rather the savage grasp of a fiend, with which he seized the new-born infanty even before the woman had time to cover the little even before her attendant, engrossed with the necessary cares for her restoration, had perceived his approach, and in the most pitcous accents besought By this time the storm had passed away ; the
