WOMAN OF THE REVOLUTION: The following story related by a mother to her children a few years since, will show the American spirit which existed among the people of New England at the trying period to which it relates.

"Late in the afternoon of one of the last days in May, 1761, when I was a few months short of fifteen years old, my father came to Townsend, Massachusetts, where my father used to live, that fifteen soldiers were sent.

"The training band was instantly called out, and my father, who was older than I, was one that was selected. He did not return till late at night when all were in bed. When I rose in the morning, I found my father in tears, who informed me that my father had been to march the day after to-morrow morning, at sunrise. My father was at Boston in the Massachusetts Assembly. Mother said that though John was supplied with summer clothes, he must for want of winter garments, and would suffer from the cold.

"I immediately asked her what garments were needed. She replied 'pantalons'. "'O, if that is all,' said I, 'I will spin and weave him a pair before he goes.' "'Tut,' said my mother, 'the wool is on the sheep's back, and the shearer is in the pasture.' 'I immediately turned to a younger brother, and bade him take a salt dish and call them to the yard.

"Mother replied 'Poor child, there are no sheep shears within three miles and a half.' 'I have some small shears in the loom,' said I. "'But we can spin and weave it in so short a time.' 'I am certain you can, mother.' 'How can you weave it—there is a long web of linen in the loom.' 'No matter, I can find an empty loom.' 'By this time, the sound of the sheep made me quicken my steps towards the yard. I requested my sister to bring me the wheels and cards, while I went for the wool. I went into the yard with my brother and secured a white sheep, from which I sheared with my loom shears half enough for a web; we then set her wool with the rest of the fleece. I sent the wool in my sister. Lumber ran for a black sheep, and had her white cut out for my spinning and half of the warp, and then we allowed her to go with the remaining part of the fleece.

"The wool thus obtained was duly carded and spun, washed, and dried; a loom was found a few yards off, the web got in, warp and prepared, card and made, two or three hours before my brother's departure—that is to say, in forty hours from the commencement, without help from any modern invention.

"The good old lady closed by saying—'I felt no weariness;—I was in my spinning. I was assisting my poor mother. I was preparing a garment for my darling brother. The garment being finished, I retired and wept, till my overcharged and burning heart was relieved.' 'This homely yarn, perhaps, one of Gen. Stark's soldiers, and with such a spirit to cope with, we wonder that Burgoyne did not execute his threat of marching through the heart of America.

"WHAT SHOULD PARENTS DO WITH THEIR DOTS?—Many parents have sons, whom when they arrive at years of discretion, they are uncertain what to do with. For instance, a respectable mechanic has a good, stout, hearty, well disposed boy, who he wishes to bring up respectable. He is in easy circumstances, some how or other he seems to think that his son must be brought up to earn money to pay the expenses of a collegiate education for the purpose of making him respectable, to make him take a higher rank in the world than that of a mechanic. What is a great mistake. When the boy leaves college, what is to do? He is then just qualified for nothing. He turns pedagogue for a while. He has learned into the youthful progeny; but, very few, think of pursuing his business of a school master as a permanent profession. After continuing it for a year or two, he quits it, and commences the study of one of the professions. Here are three or four years spent in preparing to become a professional man; and at additional expense to his father. He is at last admitted to the bar, or receives a degree of M. D. or is licensed to preach. The next thing is to get his living by the profession he has chosen; and this is not so easy a matter. All the learned professions are full of overdoing, and there seems to be no room for new beginners. The consequence is, that the young aspirant for emolument, along without getting business enough to pay the rent of an office. Year after year he tells, or would tell, if he had any thing to do, without making half enough to pay his own expense. To be sure, there are some whose superior intellect and commanding talents will enable them to rise at once to eminence and to command a business which will render them independent; but these cases are few and far between.

"YOUTH: The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time. The violet scents, but quickly past the prime. White lilies hang their heads as they decay. And winter snow melts rapidly away. Such and such will be our blooming youth!
