last two years. Year beigre last a few, and last last two years. Year helere fast a few, and last year a greaternamber of faste pears came to per-fection. Here again the solid has lacked something that this tree required in repening its fruit, and the freerable change observed ast year would seem to indicate that this material, whatever it is, which after a long period had been exhausted by the an-nual fructuleation, has after a lapse of twenty years accumulated sufficient to bring some of its-fruit to perfection. The Seekel pair, a most deli-cious fruit, having but helerably been introduced here, ripens with us in great perfection : but at here, ripens with us in great perfection ; but at Philadelphia, where the free originated about a century ago, probably from a seed from the Rous-selet de Rheime, which it greatly resembles, the Seckel has begun to suffer from exhaustion of its appropriate food, and requires an artificial supply to restore it to its wonted perfection. This fact I learn from Mr. L. C. Ford, accompanied with the valuable information illust the material wanted in , this case was some ferring nous compound as giv-ing a liberal supply of ship from the iron foundry to the roots of the trees he has restored the fruit to more than its pristine excellence. With regard to the Newton pippin, I am in possession of facts showing that our soil requires some compound of line, probably the phosphate, to enable it to bring this apple to full perfection. The details of this discovery would extend this article to an inconvenient length, but they will cheerfully be given to any sentieman requiring them. One of the facts spon which this opinion based, goes to show that an old and decaying Newton Pippin tree, which in 1810 bore chiefly small, ruste 1 and valueles affuit, in 1842 presented s healthy and flourishing appearance, and com-menced hearing large, fail and heautiful apples, menced tenting large, tail, and bedution apples, and has done the same every year since; under no other treatment than stint of having the clam and syster shells from the table of the family-de-posited under it, which has been done from the date-first mentioned up to the present time. This spring the tree has a very fine appearance, and is reparing for a heavy cropel It is worthy of remark that the very next tree is the row is likewise a Newton pippin, which still continues to bear very inferior fruit, fit only for citer. Most of the fruit trees will grow and bear fruit in any tolerable soil, but to produce it in full per-fection, many of the choicer kinds probably require materials wih which the earth in this region is but sparingly provided. If every different species of regetation requires its and appropriate food; if com, wheat, rye, de., twighthree successive crops exhaust the silcate of poysis, or some other spa-ringly provided material, essential to their growth and can no longer be cultivated in the same fields until time or the hand the man has restored what is wanting ; it surely need not excite our wonder hat a tree fixed to the same locality, and drawing all the material of its subsistence from a few feat of ground, should, in the lapse of fifty or a hundreil years'exhaust those sparse and delicate materuls essential to the perfection of its fruit ; and struggling with adverse circumstances, continue for a long period afterwards to bring forth only fruit of an inferior kind To this cause rather than to antiquity of origin, we may probably ascribe the failure of some of our favorite fruit. The Rousslet, for instance, long so highly prized by the confectioners in France, is now said to be rapidind in the best style at Philadelphia prices, is non-text rearrent of the context one in France, is now said to be rapid-II. GRESSANG acknowledges the liberal support with which the public have provided him hereitore, ind will labour on his part to here; a continuance of heir favor April 20th, 17-00 and rapid convinced to be a vigor-ous and rapid convinced to be a vigor-1. 1.ous and rapid growing tree; producing excellent fruit. This is certainly en important's abject, and deserves further investigation. May we not hope that a series of well directed experiments, with careful observations, will eventually yield the agri culturist that intimate showledge of the requirements of the plants and trees he cultivates, that shall enable him by impolying their individual wants, not only to recover, but to exceed the for-mer perfection of the new deterioating fruits?
