And bares his shining blade,
And herds are tinned, and fields are strewn,
And not with ruin laid? What, he ! in court or castle hall what, he : in court or easte half Where kings in revel shout, Are not the words his royal lips, Right royally rings out! But on the breeze, the mountain breeze, That shakes the giant rocks,

He flings defiance to the foes, That threat his fields and flocks There is no bribe of wealth or line. Nor sound of trimp or horn; But he would trample to the dust, Or hurl them back with scorn! His only boast an honest boart,
His freedom and a rod,
To battle for his kin and home,
His altar and his God!

A Stratagem.

BY MERRILL C. YOUNG Partly concealed within the border of the wood, which skirts a scene where a prairie

"Stretched in boundless beauty lies," situated a charming little cottage, nestled in shade and seclusion, beneath the foliage of overshadowing boughs. On the prazza in front of this dwelling, a venerable sucker (named Goldon) was seated one summer afternoon, building dreams of thrift as he surveyed his plantation, enameled . 'A hoss in my wheat ! exclaimed the sucker.' Yes indeed. 'Zags and lightning! Here, Blucher! Santa His call had the effect to bring forth two dogs;

of whose under jaw might lead you to mistrust that he was ever fund of what the knowing ones call the 'grab game.' Attended with these, be trutted off in 'hot haste', the dogs wagging their tails as their old master wagged his tongue, urging tnem on to the pursuit. The young stranger, after wagging his chin a little away, and induiging in a light laugh that made him look suspiciously waggist, walking to the cottage door-and then, without ceremony into the parlor. Here, finding himself alone, he commenced a survey of the apartment. Before he had much leisure, however, eitner to obtain or admire the elegancies combined in every thing around him, he was entranced by a gust, of rich. wild, melody, succeeded by the sound of light footsteps, and instantly a creature of beauty and lovebuess flitted into his presence. Oh, that fair, resy cheeked damsel, the very persondication of buthesomeness. She was started, though, when her soft blue eyes encountered the strangers and in hastily withdrawing, in doing which, she chanced to cast another glance-her countenance changed from hight to gladness-she uttered the name of Henry Leshe-and then ran-not out of the door, but smack into the young strangers

Their hopes excited, and consequently their anxieties lutted by the reasonableness of this plan, the two seated themselves on the sola and enjoyed those bright angel-plumed delights which a cu rency of love gives young hearts. When Gordon returned, however, he found the young stranger alone. Clarisse having deemed it prudent to re was glad that the stranger had tarried; he wished

Respecting Henry Leslie, he had been in early manhood an enterprising young farmer, endowed with a broad and beautiful domain; but being moreover gifted with an excellent smack of interlectual powers, he had been induced to forsake the natural avocation, for one, perhaps better bentting his ambition, taste and ability—law. In the vil-lage where he studied and practised, he first became acquainted with Clarrisse Gordon, who had accompanied an aunt from the West, with the design of completing her education at one of those menterious institutions for temale instruction. with which the eastern States abound. They loved. The aunt wrote to her brother, old Gordon, soliciting his consent for Clarisse to marry, ex-

ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE .- A circumstance

which has lately transpired at Ormskirk has been the theme of much gossip. A person named Wm. of Lathom, near Ormskirk, about twelve years ago paid his addresses to Miss A---, of the same village. Both were respectably connec-ted, and it was fully expected that the acquaintance would end in wedlock; but the fickle fair one eventually discarded her suitor, who in consequence was teized with deep melancholy, and though in perfect good health, has ever since confined himself to his room. The prevailing report, when this first happened, was that B., had gone to America; but three or four years after-wants, a person affirmed that he had seen him walking one day near the house in which he and his family then lived, and another person, about four years since, when looking through the parlor window, saw him distinctly and stated that his beard had grown to an enormous length. Theso reports, nevertheless, never gained much credence; and as his immediate friends never alluded to him. the general belief was that he had forever left the from the cast. As . Extraonbinant Fact .- An old man died last summer in Paris at the advanced age of eighty-five, who was a perfect miser. He came to Paris, accompanied by his son, about three years since in the most abject state of poverty. They depended entuely upon the charity of their neighbors for subsistence, and were in the daily habit of begging from door, for something to support them. One of the neighbors, having missed seeing the old man for a few days, went in search of him, and found him just breathing his last in a miserable hovel destricte of every necessary. He was lying big a heap of straw in one corner of the but, without any covering. In the same place was his son, about 16 years old, with scarcely a rig to cover him, crying most preously.
