This account is condensed from his statement to the Committee .ef the Agricultural Society, who examined the farm as published in the Bos-Courier .- . Ilbany Cultivator.

> Hay in England is scarcely ever put in barns. It keeps well in stacks, made up as they are in the neatest manner, and carefully thatched with straw. Nothing can be more beautiful and workmanlike than the manner in which they are made canvas covering to suspend upon poles over the stack in order to protect it from rain. I refer to those minute circumstances to illustrate the extreme carefulness with which many of the operations of husbandry are here conducted. When the hay is to be used, aviable stack is never removed to the stables at once, but is carfully cut down as a loaf of bread might be cut, and always done up and bound in trussee, intended to be of fifty-six pounds each, and in that way carried to be This requires distributed to the animals. some extra labor ; but the farmers find their accounts in it.-: Coleman's European 'Agriculture. CULTIVATION OF CRANBERRIES ON UPLAND Sours .- The attention of the public having been called to the culture of this delicious fruit, and Mr. Gardner, of Massachusetts, having produced three hundred and twenty bushels to the acre, on upland soil; I proceed to give his mode of culti-vation, as-follows; "I select a piece of cold wet land that will keep moist through the year; remove the top soil to the depth of two inches; this prevents all grass or weeds from growing, and the plant will require no cultivation after they are set out. After the top was removed, I harrowed the ground smooth and marked it out in drills, eighteen inches square, placed in holes a little below to December. and from April to the last of June.

PLASTERING AND ASHING .- In order to ensure rapid growth to the young plants, prepare a umpost of ashes and plaster, in proportion of 5 pushels of the former to L of the latter, and give to each bill of corn, just as the plant comes up, a gill of mixture. Its increase of yield will pay you liberally for your trouble and expense. And , in addition to this, you were to sow a bushel of plaster per acrespoad cast over your fields, you would be most bountifully rewarded for the labor
