LONG AGO. From H. H. Brownwell's Poems.

When at eve I sit alone,
Thinking on the Past and Gone—
While the clock, with drowsy finger,
Marks how slow the minutes linger—
And the embers dimly burning Tell of Life to Dust returning—
Then my lonely chair around,
With a mourning selemn sound—
With a murmur soft and low,
Come the ghosts of Long Ago. One by one I count them o'er, Voices that are heard no more, Tears that loving cheeks have wet, Words whose must lingers yet— Hoty faces pale and fair, Shadowy locks of waving hair— Gentle sighe and whispers dear, Songs forgotten many a year—

Songs forgotten many a year. Lips of dewy fragrance—eyes Brighter, bluer than the skies And the gentle shadows glide Softly murmuring at my side, Till the long and gloomy day All forgotten fades away. Thus, when I am all alone. Dreaming of the Past and Gone, All around me sad and slow Come the ghosts of Long Ago.

Select Tale.

THE WAY TO GET MARRIED BY ADVER-TISEMENT.

Surrounding a table, on which were mingled cups of tea, bottles of liquor, glasses, and a bowl of punch, Alfred Couvraud and some half-a-dozen of his young companions were finishing their evening's entertainment. Their party had been rather a noisy one, all young and gay, the room had resounded with joyous fooleries, mirthful songs and shouts of laughter. But as change in this world is universal, their merriment wore out of itself, and the conversation assumed a seriopleton, with whom they sought to aimse thempleton, with whom they sought to aimse themcomic turn. I was evident that the liquids were nearly exhausted.

"It must be allowed, gentlemen," said Alfred, placing his empty glass upon the table, and with a heightened color that contrasted forcibly with the tone of gravity he tried to assume, "it must be allowed that the life of a bachelor is very inspired." His companions looked at him with an sipid." His companions looked at him with as-tonishment, and their silence indicated that they were not of his opinion. Alfred continued, "Exercise without end—noise and riot without ny good result -- days spent in reaping the fruits of prodigality, regret and repentance-this is the life of a bachelor, which is called the most delightful season of our existence.' "But it is the freedom from care and restraint that forms the charm; you cannot deny that," said Felix Janier, who appeared to have preserved his senses better than the rest.

"I am tired of that freedom," cried Alfred, wearied with illusions and chimeras that exhaust me while attempting to realize them. I am disgusted with silly amours which fail to interest the heart, while they destroy my sensibility. I must have tranquility-a regular domestic life." "Are you dreaming of a marriage 1" asked Felix.

"You have said it; yes! a beloved wife with some little images of myself-happiness assured and continued-it is of these I dream."

"Then what prevents you from marrying?"

"Why, my good fellow, I am so idle. I do not like the trouble of seeking out a wife; besides, by seeking, one is not likely to find a suitable

"Then I suppose you would like some lady to "And why not?"

"Well, I see but one way; place an advertisement in some favorite journal. "Faith, I never thought of that !" "And you would not have done it if you had. was but jesting when I named it !"

"But I am positively serious! "What, to publish yourself in this manner? "And give your address?"

"To be sure!" "Come, come-that would be too original, and you are not the man to do it." " But I will do it."

" And when?" " To-night!" "I will wager a dinner you do not." "I accept the bet."
"Gentlemen," said Felix rising, " you are witness to this weger. You will partake of the din-ner to-morrow, at the Recher Concale," Of course, there was no dissenting voice to this invitation, and the evening being far advanced, the party separated.

The morning of the next day was cold and rainy—one of those gloomy days in which time creeps slowly away, and the atmosphere seems only to breathe despair. Madame Souville, and her friend Lucy were uffering from its influence. They had been silent for more than five minutes, and that was a long time for two young, pretty and fortunate women, one of whom had proved that love may survive marriage, and the other was at two and twenty, the widow of an old man to whom she had considered herself sacrificed. Seated before a good fire, the ladies were notwithstanding devoured by the vapors, when Lucy suddenly paused from mechanically turning over the leaves of the morning journal. Her attention was arrested by few lines, which she had perceived on turning over, and having read them she laughed heartily · What is it ?" said her friend. "Oh, the addest thing; the drollest, the most acredible that you may fancy," answered Lucy " Of what nature?"

"An advertisement; I will give you ten minutes, twenty minutes, to guess its purport." " It is not worth a while to try." " Perhaps not; so listen:

"Yerhaps not; so listen:

"A young man, 28 years of age, dark complexion, tolerable figure, and agreeable countenance, well educated and possessing good qualities which he flatteres himself would assure the happiness of any lady who may enjoy an income of no mote than 8000 francs, desires to enter the state of matrimony as early as possible. Youth and beauty are not so much valued in his estimation, as those moral and sterling qualities which form the basis of domestic happiness, yet he would rather the lady would not exceed his own age, nor would he unite himself to a woman repulsively ugly. Address to M. Alfred Couvraud, 11, Rue d'Angouleme." "Are those really the words?" asked M. Sou-ville, laughing in her turn. "Read for yourself." Madame took the paper and looked over the paragraph: "It is too absurd," she said. "He is some stupid ninny, some stupid lout," added Lucy. 9

must be a fit object for mirth, I am sure." "Oh, you jest."
"No, indeed, I do not!"

"But what purpose would it answer?" "Why, we are already weary of this gloomy day, and it is not yet half gone." Well, but reflect, my dear Lucy; observances, "He must be a person incapable of judging estable a letter from Alfred announcing his apsuch matters. We should be at no loss on that point, I am quite certain." "Suppose anything unpleasant should arise out of such a proceeding. I have no fear of that, we should be two to one; and two women, too!" Madame Souville hesitated a moment, and then ton.

coachman. "Peter," said she, "put the horses to the carriage, and take this note to its address." The coachman obeyed his orders, and Lucy clapped her hands in ecstacy, and anticipating rare sport. The two ladies, like two children eager for a game of play, waited impatiently for the return of Peter, with M. Alfred Couvraud.

Madame Souville's carriage had been a quarter of an hour before Alfred's door, yet he had not comprehended the note, which he was reading for a ninth time. " M. Alfred Couvraud is requested that he will allow himself to be conveyed in the carriage sent for him, to a person who wants to see him on important business."

Suddenly recollecting the wager of the previous vening, he said to himself: "Ah, this is some trick of those merry fellows. They would fain see whether I am willing to follow up the consequen-ces of that advertisement. Well, they shall find I am not one to recede, and if they think to mystify me, they may see the tables turned, perhaps." And he dressed himself hastily and descended but on getting into the carriage, the coachman's livery staggered him a little. He stretched himself, however, quite comfortably on the cushioned seat; and thought, "Bah! the better to succeed, they have borrowed this equippage. Well, let those laugh who win!" The horses in a very few minutes, stopped before the gates of a handsome, hotel, which immediately opened, and Alfred, ilighting, was conducted by a do restic, who was gentleman was somewhat astonished when, the ervant having thrown open a pair of folding doors to announce him, he found himself in the presence of two ladies. Though he was puzzled, he did not loose his presence of mind, and still suspecting some ambush, he held himself prepared to act on selves, they saw a well mannered, personable young man. His look was gracious, yet polite, and his dress elegant without being foppish. He address knowing how to reply. At length Lucy summoning confidence, pointed to the journal and

"And why not?" replied the young man, unable to perceive how he should get out of the scrape he had advertised himself into. "I should think my chance for happiness greater with a widow than a young girl. Girls have such golden dreams perfection: and I know that I am not perfect.' "This difficulty being removed, I see no other," added Lucy, laughing heartily. Alfred felt rather strange -he thought some jest was to be played off, but could not guess how or for what purpose. He resolved, however, to have all his wits about him, and at any rate come off

"Indeed!" "Yes. I have talents by which I can gain a yearly income of nine or ten thousand francs; I estimate myself at that sum and no more, and as I am of opinion that there should be equality on all safety of her husband-and when the bell tolled points between uniting parties, to ensure their mutual happiness, I am resolved that I will owe nothing to my wife, nor shall she be indebted to me." "And would you refuse a lady from this mo corpse of the devoted Wife.

"I would. I am not of an ungrateful disposition, but I cannot endure the feeling of obligation. "Then, sir, there is no more to be said." "Forget this interview, madame." and Alfred, tising, begged permission to retire. The ladies assented; he howed, and left the room, doubting whether he were in a dream or had been engaged in a scheme planned by Felix Janier.

"Truly this young man is a singular being," said Lucy to her friend, when the door had been closed on Alfred, "it is very well I magnified my "I told you," said madame Souville, "that we He is ruined who runs into danger because the

"But who could imagine that we should meet | [Port. Tribune.] with such an adversary," observed the widow .--Really, I do not dislike him." That same evening, Alfred, Felix, and the friends assembled at the appointed place. Felix enacted the Amphyryon with a rather ill grace, and Alfred, by a few adroit questions, satisfied himself that none of the party had been privy to very odd, as he reflected after his return from the dinner. Two months after this, Felix Janier arrived Chrilling Sketch.

THE WIFE.

By John G. Whittier.

She was a beautiful girl when I first saw her. She was standing up at the side of her lover at the marriage altar. She was slightly pale-yet ever and anon, as the ceremony proceeded, a faint tinge of crimson crossed her beautiful cheek, like the reflections of a sunset cloud upon the clear waters of a quiet lake. Her lover, as he clasped her hand within his own, gazed on her a few mo-ments with unmingled admiration, and warm and eloquent blood shadowed at intervals his manly forehead and melted in beauty on his lips.

And they gave themselves to one another in the presence of Heaven, and every heart blessed them, as they went their way rejoicing in their love. Years passed on and I again saw those lovers. They were seated together where the light of sunset stole through half-closed crimson curtains, lending a richer tint to the delicate corpeting and the exquisite embellishment of the rich and gor geous apartment. Time had slightly changed them in outward appearance. The girlish buoyancy of the one had indeed given place to the grace of perfect womanhood, and her lips were somewhat paler, and a faint line of care was slightly perceptible upon her brow. Her husband's brow, too, was marked somewhat more deeply than his age might warrant; anxiety, and ambition, and pride had grown over it and left their traces upon it; a silver hue was mingled with the dark in his hair, which had become thin evidently waiting for him up stairs! The young around his temples, almost to baldness. He was reclining on his splendid ottoman with his face half hid len by his hand, as if he feared that the deep and froubled thoughts which oppressed him were vitale upon his features.

"Edward, you are ill to-night," said his wife in a low, sweet, half-inquiring voice, as she and her hands upon his own. Indifference from those we love is terrible to the sensitive bosom. It is as if the sun of heaven refused its wonted cheerfulness, and glared upon us with a cold, dim and forbidden glance. It is dreadful to feel that the only being of our love refuses to ask our sympathy that he broods over the feelings which he scorns or fears to revealdreadful to watch the convulsive features and the gloomy brow, the indefinable shadows of hidden motion, the involuntary sigh of sorrow in which we are forbidden to participate, and whose character we cannot know. The wife essayed once "Edward," she said, slowly, mildly, and affectionately, "the time has been when you were willing to confide your secret joys and sorrows to one who had never, I trust, betrayed your confidence ! Why, then, my dear Edward, is this cruel re-serve? You are troubled, and yet refuse to tell' me the cause."

Something of returning tenderness softened for an instant, the cold severity of the husband's feafures, but it passed away, and a bitter smile was his only reply.

Time passed on and the twain was separated from each other. The husband sat gloomy and alone in the damp cell of a dangeon. He had followed ambitton as a God, and had failed in a high career He had mingled with men whom his heart loathed, he had sought out the fierce and wronged spirits of the land, and had breathed into them the madness of revenge. He had "Murriage, sir, is a sacred and important thing; drawn his sword against his country; he has fanned rebellion to a flame, and it had been quench-"Are certainly not the most prudent, madame, ed in human blood. > The door of the dungeon opened and a light form entered and threw herself into his arms. The softest light of sunset fell upon the pale brow and wasted cheek of his once beautiful wife. "Edward; my dear Edward," she said, "I have come to save you; I have reached you after a thousand difficulties, and, I thank God, my purpose is nearly executed."

Misfortunes had softened the proud heart of manhood, and as the husband pressed his pale wife to his bosom, a tear trembled on his eyelash. "I have not deserved this kindness," he murmured in the choked tone of agony. "Edward," said his wife, in an earnest but faint and low voice, which indicated extreme and fearful debility," "we have not a moment to lose. By an exchange of garments you will be able to pass out unnoticed. Haste, or we may be too late. Fear nothing for me. I am a woman and they will not injure me for my efforts in behalf of a husband dearer than life itself."

"But Margaret," said the husband, "you look sadly ill. You cannot breathe the air of this dreadful cell." "Oh, speak not to me, my dearest Edward," said the devoted woman, "I can endure anything for your sake. Haste, Edward, and all will be well," and she aided with a trembling hand, to disguise the proud form of her husband in female

" Farewell, my love, my preserver," whispered too old: and I suppose if my fortune was double the husband in the ear of the disguised wife, as what you name that would not be a positive onthat the time allotted to her visit had expired. "Farewell! we shall not meet again," respon-ded the wife; and the husband passed out unsusprected and escaped the enemies of his life.

They did meet again: the wife and busband; but only as the deal may meet, in the awful communings of another world. Affection had borns up her exhausted spirit until the last great puroses of her exertions were accomplished in the on the morrow, and the prisoner's cell was opened, the guards found; wrapped in the habiliments of their destined victim, the pale but beautiful
